MISCELLANY.

THE FICKLE MAN.

Yes—I must confess—in fact there would be no use in denying—every body knows it—I am—I always have been—I always shall be—a fickle man. I have no fixed opinions, no fixed wishes, no fixed passions, no fixed prejudices, or partialities, or antipathies. I am the regular creature that men talk so lightly of, that women hate so. Nature, nature, why didst thou create me fickle? That one fault has swallowed up all my accomplishments, all my virtues.

I am ingenious, affectionate, talented, well-informed, and, withal, (so people say,) rather peculiar for good appearance and interesting address. But they have a cant way of talking about me, as, 'he is certainly a fine fellow, but then' (fancy the face drawn up into an expression of half pity and half contempt,) 'but then he has no stability. He is fickle as the wind.'

Well! so I am; and I must bear the consequences; and so I will, let hum drum people with stability and fidelity, and all that, say what they please. I hate stability. Heaven formed me of fine, subtle materials, susceptible to every impression, full of fire and enthusiasm. What they call stability is selfishness, the want of noble and uncontrollable impulses. The existence of such persons is confined within the narrowest circle. They are like certain animals or insects. Your spider, now is a stable, faithful, precious character. He sits all night and all day in his dark dusty corner, weaving his murderous web, ignorant of all the magnificent operations around him. Suppose he had a heart to feel the glowing charms of nature, would not he oftentimes abandon his lowly task? and then the people would grieve that he had no stability.

As the world is, however, my disposition subjects me to many misconstructions. In business matters I am shunned by all who know me. In affairs of the heart, heaven help me, I fear I have got my reputation up for a sad fellow, but upon my soul I cannot help it. Let me give you a brief account of my last year.

I met Charlotte A—at a jam, in a street. She was the belle of the evening, and her beauty, wit, and animation unmanned me quite. With what taste she dressed! Sure some perukier from Paris had modelled her rich hair so ingeniously. The saucy New York fashions. What daring spirit set them! They are worthy of the genius of Napoleon. Their audacious elegance appeared to me graceful as the lovely being who wore them, and what with dancing, waltzing, singing and eating ices, I—fell in love with Charlotte, and she with me.

She reminded me of those superb lines by the author of Lillian.

She sketched—the vale, the wood, the beach
Grew lovelier from her pencil's shading;
She botanized—I envied each
Young blossom in her bosom fading.
She warbled Handel—it was grand,
She made the Catalani jealous.
She touched the organ—I could stand
For hours and hours and blow the bellows!

I should certainly have married Charlotte, had I not the next week met her sister. Fancy can picture no beings more unlike. The first was, I soon found out, a great tall forward girl, who had flirted with all the handsome men in town. But Laura! a rose-bud just uncurling its leaves—a dove seeking the loneliest shade—a creature so gentle and pure, that to see her and not to love her, would have been in me—not fidelity, but stupidity. Why should I not love her? She was every way better than her sister, both in person, mind and disposition. When I compared their dress I was compelled to make up my mind at once. Charlotte has a child's passion for finery and gewgaws. I had been dazzled by her complexion. I had looked into her eyes, and taken it for granted that the mind was as beautiful, and I had not seen that her heart was trifling and her soul low—that she snatched at a good offer of matrimony as a codfish snags at a baited hook—and that, in short, she was not the woman to make me happy. No Charlotte, I said to myself, thou hast deceived me: I deceived myself, I thought I loved thee, but I love thee not. It was a spirit of my own imagination, which I conceived dwelt in thy form—to marry thee would make us both miserable. So I abandoned myself entirely to my passion for Laura. Never shall I forget the impression the first sight of her made upon me. After the tinsel and glitter both in the apparel and manners of her sister, how grateful to my observation was her quiet demeanor; the hair parted so simply over her forehead—her dress so proper, and obviously arranged to avoid notice. The dress of a modest woman is the thing after all, however unfashionable such an affair certainly is. I'll tell you the identical moment when I fell in love with Laura. It was one afternoon in summer on a walk. I had been rather interested in watching her actions, but never dreamed of loving her, till a casual remark was made by one of the party. It appeared strange to me; but no one noticed it. I passed my eyes deliberately over every face to detect an expression of that feeling which it had awakened in my breast. No one responded with even a glance, till I came to her. Her eyes were fixed on a flower which she held in her fingers. I observed her face. Did you ever in nature gaze on any thing more beautiful than the expression on a sweet woman's features, while she is quietly engaged in a pleasurable thought? When she looked up, my first thought was that she had precisely my own idea of what had been said. My second—that it was exceedingly strange I had seen her so often, without perceiving how superior her beauty was over that of all her companions. My third—that I wondered if any one was in love with her; and my fourth, that I was actually in love with her myself. I offered her my arm immediately. She accepted it with the sweetest of sweet smiles. By heaven! she was an angel. Her voice—the tone of a running brook was not more full of nature's own melody, and her mind—

Now what was I to do? I was positively engaged to Charlotte. But what of that? Could a contract entered into through a mistake, excuse me for swearing at the altar that I would for ever love her? It would be a downright—No, I would not 'lay perjury to my soul'; so I wrote her a civil note, couched in the most delicate terms, and calculated not to wound her feelings. I felt like a scoundrel when I sealed the letter. Everything I had ever read about broken hearts came up in my memory; I thought of Mr. W. Irving's delicious bit of poetic prose, and I recollected, 'she embarks her whole soul in the traffic of affection, and if shipwrecked, her case is hopeless, etc.' I had not well finished my reveries, when the messenger brought her reply, which stated, 'that she was extremely happy to find I had taken off her hands the trouble of breaking from a match which must eventuate unhappily. 'Gracious heavens!' said I to myself, glad to find I was no murderer, but a little piqued, notwithstanding; 'what an escape I have had!'

I was soon on such terms with Laura that we had only to name the day. I sat one morning in my office, alone and thoughtful. 'Dear Laura,' said I to myself, 'how happy will thy artlessness make me. Thy pure trusting innocence—thy very ignorance of the world—(I think ignorance in a woman is becoming, it flings her so under the control of her husband.)'

'Laura knows nothing of the world. She cares for it so little that she has not even taken pains to acquire those accomplishments which would make her appear well in fashionable society. She does not draw—and paint and dance—and play and sing. These are allurements which lead to dissipation. Dear Laura, thou art made for me.'

I was interrupted by the entrance of an intimate friend. He knew me well, and I unbosomed myself to him.

'Yes, dear Tom, I am going to marry.'

'And whom?'

'Dear Tom, the loveliest of her sex.'

'Fiddlesticks, so you said of Mary B.—ditto, Henrietta L.—ditto, Anna V.—ditto.'

'But, Tom, these feelings were merely the ebullitions of a boyish fancy; they were bubbles which broke—dreams—all nonsense: but now, I am not only in love, but actually engaged—engaged; and I am this very morning waiting to receive from her, sole object of my everlasting love, a letter, naming the day that is to make us happy—and, by Jupiter, here it is!'

A boy entered, and handed me the letter. It was the first I had ever received from her. I kissed it—pressed it to my bosom—kissed it again, then opened it, and read—

'MY DEER W.—I am now your's forever and ever—so shall not make no bones of saying that next Tuesday night two weeks shall be the period of our union.'

Yours affectionately,—LAURA.

I put up the letter. I recollected at that moment that I had been told something of her sickness in early life, and backward in education. My friend wished me joy, and as soon as he had gone, I answered the letter, saying, that some inexplicable accidents in my pecuniary matters had reduced me so far as to render matrimony out of the question. She never replied to the letter. These are a few of the disadvantages we fickle men feel.

I am ashamed to confess how little pain I suffered from this disappointment. I foreswore all womankind, however, as I had done several times before, and resolved to apply myself to mathematics, so I shut myself up in my study, resolved to admit no one, and to spend all my leisure moments there alone. I had just moved into the house. Some one tapped at the door—heavens, what a lovely creature! fresh as a full-blown rose. She courtied, blushed, and spoke very prettily to tell me her master had sent her to know whether I 'wanted anything.' 'By Jove,' said I, as I closed the door, 'Is it possible I am in love again?'

SINGLE LIFE.

The single state is no diminution of the beauties and utilities of the female character; on the contrary, our present life would lose many of the comforts, and much likewise of what is absolutely essential to the well-being of every part of Society, and even of the private home, without the unmarried female. To how many a father, a mother, a brother, and not less a sister, is she both a necessity and a blessing! How many orphans have to look up with gratitude to her care and kindness! How many young nephews and nieces owe their young felicities and improvements to her! Were every woman married, the parental home would often in declining life be a solitary abode, when affectionate attentions are most precious, and, but from such a source, unattainable. It is the single class of woman, which supplies most of our teachers and governesses, and in the lower ranks nearly all the domestic assistants of our households. What vast changes, and promotive of the general happiness, would ensue in every station of life, if every female married, as soon as she was fully grown! Certainly life would in that case have a different aspect, and must be regulated on a new principle, and would lead to consequences which cannot now be calculated.

The single woman is therefore as important an element of social and private happiness as the married one. The utilities of each are different, but both are necessary; and it is vulgar nonsense, unworthy of manly reason, and discreditable to every just feeling, for any one to depreciate the unmarried condition.

If from what is beneficial we turn our glance to what is interesting, the single lady is in this respect not surpassed by the wedded matron. For no small portion of her life, I think for the whole of it, with judicious conduct, she is indeed the most attractive personage. The wife resigns, or ought always to resign her claims to general attention; and to concentrate and confine her regards and wishes and objects to her chosen companion, and domestic claims and scenes. She has quitted the public stage; she seeks no more the general gaze; she has become a part of a distinct and separate propriety. But the unmarried lady still remains a candidate for every honorable notice, and injures no one by receiving it. Those of the male sex who are in the same condition, are at as full liberty to pay her their proper attentions, as she is to receive them. Being in this position to society at large, she is always interesting wherever she goes; and if she preserve her good temper, her steady conduct, and her modest reputation undiminished, and cultivate her amiable, her intellectual, and her truly feminine qualities, she cannot go any where, in any station of life, without being an object of interest and pleasurable feelings to all those of her own circle with whom she may chance to be acquainted.

It is for us all, never to regret or covet, what we do not and cannot obtain; and never repine that others have what we do not possess. It is for us all, to use and value and cultivate the happiness which we are possessing, and not sigh or crave for that which does not come to us. Let the single of both sexes, think, feel and act persevering on this principle, and they will find that life, in every one of its stages and positions, is like a fine garden, full of rich, though varied flowers and fruits, in all its compartments.

HOMELY.

What if you are homely as a log hut. Don't cry about it. Let goodness of heart make up for outward looks. A lady with eyes that resemble peeled onions, and as crooked as a politician's creed, a nose like a hoe and a mouth that stretches from ear to ear, and opens like a jack-knife, will be more respected and beloved, by those whose good opinion is worth one's pains to secure, if she possesses a good heart and a kind disposition—than if she was beautiful as Milton's Eve, with a corkscrew disposition and a heart of lead. The wise never judge from the complexion of the skin or the symmetry of the form, but the virtues of the heart and a corresponding life.

REARING APPLE TREES. A gentleman in Bohemia has established a beautiful plantation of the best sort of apple trees, which have neither sprung from the seeds nor from grafting. His plan is to take shoots from the choicest sorts, insert each of them into a potato, and plunge both into the ground, leaving but an inch or two of the shoots, whilst it pushes out roots, and the shoot gradually springs up and becomes a beautiful tree, bearing the best of fruit, without requiring to be grafted.

ONE HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

Time is justly said to be the greatest of all innovators; the author of the most important revolutions.

One hundred years ago, there was no independent civilized nation in North or South America, only European colonies and Indian tribes. The whole of this vast continent, with considerable exceptions, was possessed or claimed by France, Spain, Portugal and England.

The Spanish Empire in America was the most extensive and magnificent inheritance that ever fell to the lot of any nation, conferring all South America of any value except Brazil, and also the Floridas and Mexico in North America.

The French Colonies and territory claimed by France, then included Canada and Louisiana, and extended from the mouth of the St. Lawrence to the Gulf of Mexico. All the great lakes and nearly all the great rivers of North America, or the St. Lawrence, Mississippi, Missouri and Ohio, were deemed by France within the limits of her American empire. England herself, after the conquest of Canada, made the Ohio river, down to the Mississippi, the boundary of Canada.

The rich and extensive country of Brazil, large as the United States, even at the present time, was then a Portuguese colony.

The English dominion in America includes the thirteen Colonies, so called, and Nova Scotia. This territory was much less extensive than that of either of the other nations, but more populous than the dominions of France and Portugal.

France, Spain and Portugal have since lost all their dominions on the continent of America, with some exceptions, not worth mentioning. England has likewise lost all she possessed a century ago, of any importance, unless it be Nova Scotia. She has since gained Canada, a part of Oregon, and may be said to be the only European power having dominion or influence in America.

In a word, it may be said that the whole Continent of America, from the North Polar Sea to Patagonia, has within a century changed masters. No country or state is under the government of the same nation or composes a part of the same empire. With some insignificant exceptions, no part of America, south of Canada, now acknowledges the dominion of any European power.

WORDS TO THE THOUGHTFUL.

Blessed is the pilgrim, who in every place, and at all times of this his banishment in the body, calling upon the holy name of Jesus, calleth to mind his native, heavenly land, where his blessed Master, the King of Saints and angels, waiteth to receive him.

If the Clock of the tongue be not set by the dial of the heart, it will not go right.

Holiness is the health of the spirit, and the true foundation of its permanent well-being and happiness.

The gem cannot be polished without friction, nor man perfected without adversity.

Old men are long shadows, and their evening sun lies cold upon the earth, but they all point towards the morning.

Galileo, the most profound philosopher of his age, when interrogated by the Inquisition as to his belief of a Supreme Being, replied, pointing to a straw on the floor of his dungeon, that from the structure of that alone, he would infer with certainty, the existence of an intelligent Creator.

Knowledge lies deep in a well, but there is a way to draw it up, and diligent scholars find it out.

God has made no one absolute. The rich depend on the poor, as well as the poor on the rich. The world is but a mere magnificent building; all the stones are gradually cemented together. There is no one subsists by himself alone.

The hypocrite and the pharisee, like some beasts, are only valuable for their skin and their fine colors.

GRAFTING.

Grafts are generally procured during the fall season, and put by until wanted, yet they may be cut any time in the spring before the bud bursts. They should generally be of last year's growth, and are best from outer limbs of bearing trees. There are various modes of inserting the graft, yet the rational of the art will, no doubt, suggest to each and every mind a method for its own guidance. But first of all it is to be observed, that the sap of a tree ascends by the alburnum—that is to say by the white wood lying next the bark; and descends by the liber, or innermost portion of the bark. Sap circulates through a graft in like manner. In grafting, then, the desired end is to adjust the graft upon the stock in such a manner as will permit the sap of the latter to pass freely up into the graft, and to return again, without material interruption; consequently, the first thing necessary is to cut off the head, or limbs of the tree, (as the case may be,) and next, to adjust, in place of the parts thus removed, the desired graft, which must be done by fitting its alburnum closely upon that of the tree, keeping the outer edge of the two sap woods in line, that their inner barks may also communicate with each other—and lastly, securing the graft by cement, grafting wax, or a mixture of clay and cowdung, completes the work. The various modes of grafting are merely expressions of individual views respecting the readiest manner of affording the greatest extent of communication between the alburnums and inner barks of the stock and graft, while at the same time, there shall be secured to the graft, the greatest protection against accidental disturbance. The philosophy of vegetation in the graft is happily expressed by Mr. Knight, thus:

"The mere contract of the two enables the sap flowing upwards through the stock to sustain the life of the scion, until the latter can develop its buds, which then send down their wood; at the same time, the cellular system of the parts in contact unites by granulations; and when the wood descends, it passes through the cellular deposit, and holds the whole together."

MUSIC AND DANCING.

MR. EDITOR—I noticed, a few weeks since, that some one was giving your readers lessons on the evil tendency of Dancing. There are many in the community, who, in their zeal to promote the moral, entirely overlook the physical education of the young, forgetting that without the latter the former can never have a healthy and ennobling influence in after life. Permit me to lay before your readers the view of Dr. Sylvester Graham on this subject. No one can doubt the Doctor's acquaintance with physiological subjects, and his opinion ought to have greater weight than that of one whose zeal is not according to knowledge.

PAINE.

"The salutary influence of animating music connected with exercise, is very great,—in fact, it may almost be said to be medicinal; for it actually has the most healthful effect on all the vital functions of the body; and hence, dancing, when properly regulated, is one of the most salutary kinds of social enjoyment, ever practised in civic life: and every enlightened philanthropist must regret to see it give place to any other kind of amusement. The religious prejudice against dancing, is altogether ill-founded; for it is entirely certain that this kind of social enjoyment, when properly regulated, is more favorable to good health, sound morality, and true religion, than perhaps any other known in society. It is infinitely better that people should come together and sing and dance, in the healthful exhilaration of their spirits, than that they should come together to eat and drink, or to seek enjoyment in almost any of the modes of social entertainment in civic life; or that they should endure a miserable existence in moping melancholy, for want of proper exercise and relaxation."

"Let me not be misunderstood, however,—I do not intend to encourage the assembling of young people together at public taverns and hotels, and spending the night in dancing, eating, drinking and other improprieties;—but I would have this kind of exercise mostly confined to the domestic and social circles. Vocal music ought to be as universal a branch of education as reading and writing; and instrumental music should be almost as extensively cultivated. I could have my wish, the violin—the best musical instrument ever invented—should be played in every family in the civilized world,—and every evening, when the duties and cares of the day were completed, the whole domestic circle,—parents and grand parents—child en and grand children,—all that could move with comfort, should have an opportunity to join in the dance. Even those who have been engaged in active labor through the day, would be refreshed by it; and those who had been confined by sedentary employment, would be exceedingly benefited;—the old would be made younger, and the young would be invigorated;—the social feelings would be improved;—sleep would be more sound and refreshing;—and all would be more happy and more virtuous. For true health and true virtue are more nearly allied than is generally supposed. 'How can they addict themselves to the practice of virtue, and to the service of God,' says Plato, 'who are ever caring for their own miserable bodies?'

"If music, marching and dancing, constituted a part of the regular exercises of all our colleges, theological seminaries, and literary and scientific institutions, immense benefits would result, not only to those institutions, but to society at large. Thousands who now pass from the place of learning to years of misery and an untimely grave, would be preserved in health, and live to be blessed and to bless mankind by their usefulness."

CULTURE OF WATER MELONS. A writer in the Albany Cultivator gives the following method of cultivating melons. Having removed the soil sufficiently to receive about half a bushel of horse stable manure and leached ashes, which were thrown in for the hill and leveled, about the same quantity of road side gravel lodged at the foot of the hill by water was also thrown in, and some of the soil thrown back, in which the seeds were planted; then over the hill a small quantity of broken charcoal was scattered. The plants were occasionally watered with wash water, or from the sink. The melons were fine, and many of them weighed from ten to twelve pounds each.

GRAFTING CEMENT. One part of tallow, two parts of beeswax, and three parts of rosin. Melt and mix the whole, then turn it into cold water, and work as shoemaker's wax. These proportions form a compound that will not run in a hot summer's sun, nor crack in a winter's severest frost.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

SATURDAY, APRIL 3, 1847.

John A. Greep, Editor.

MEXICAN NEWS. It is believed that a desperate battle has been fought between the Americans and Mexicans. The battle lasted nearly two days. Gen. Taylor was victorious, losing about seven hundred killed and wounded, among the number upwards of sixty officers. Santa Anna lost more than four thousand killed and wounded, and retreated more than eighteen miles. The Americans rushed to the battle amid loud huzzas, and the Mexicans charged to the mouth of the canon. Among the number of American officers killed may be mentioned Col. A. Yell of Arkansas, a son of Hon. Henry Clay of Kentucky, a son of Hon. Levi Lincoln of this State, etc. The Mexican troops are suffering for the want of food and may possibly disband.

No definite news has been received from Maj. Gen. Scott—the reports of the surrender of Vera Cruz and the Castle have not been confirmed.

GENERAL COURT. The bill for more stringent regulations, relative to the sale of intoxicating drinks, including malt liquors and cider, has been indefinitely postponed in the Senate by a vote of 29 yeas to 9 nays.

The bill giving Amherst College five hundred dollars a year for five years has passed the House by a unanimous vote.

A bill has been reported to the House to incorporate the Quincy Mutual Fire Insurance Company. A petition has been presented and referred to Abraham Holart and others to prevent the seining of smelts in Monaquit River at Weymouth and Braintree.

A bill has been reported to incorporate the Quincy Point Railroad on the petition of James Newcomb and others.

SINGING SCHOOL EXHIBITION. We invite attention to the advertisement of the entertainment to be given by the Schools under the instruction of Mr. Felt. We learn that the gentleman has been highly successful as a teacher and doubtless the exhibition will be well worth attending.

INSOLVENT LAW. The act now before the Legislature provides that 'No insolvent debtor shall receive his discharge unless his assets shall pay fifty per cent of the claims proved against his estate, or unless a majority, in value, of his creditors who shall have proved their claims shall, within six months after the date of the assignment, file their assent thereto, in writing, with the judge of probate or master in chancery before whom the proceedings may be pending.' The petitioner for the benefit of the law is required to 'file the schedule of his creditors, at the time of filing his petition, instead of producing it at the first meeting of his creditors.' Written notices are to be sent to all known creditors, in calling the first meeting.

WRIG NOMINATION. The whigs at their County Convention, in Dedham, have nominated for County Commissioners the present board, Messrs Samuel P. Loud of Dorchester, Joseph Hawes of Walpole, and James C. Donne of Cohasset; and for Special Commissioners, Messrs Timothy P. Whitney of Wrentham and Abraham F. Howe of Roxbury, were selected in place of the present incumbents.

RAILROAD PROJECT. It has been stated to one of the Legislative Railroad Committees, that the plan of constructing a railroad partly around Boston, so as to connect all the interior railroads with deep water at East Boston, had been so far matured that promises had been received for a large part of the capital stock—$1,200,000.

OLD COLONY RAILROAD. By reference to the advertisement in another column, it will be perceived that the Old Colony Railroad have changed their arrangements for running the cars.

APPOINTMENT. It is with pleasure, we announce, that S. B. Phinney, editor of the Barnstable Patriot, has been appointed Collector of Customs for the District of Barnstable—a selection which cannot fail to be highly acceptable as well as richly deserved by the recipient.

SHIPWRECK. The bark Cactus, which sailed from Boston, on Sunday morning of last week, went ashore on Truro Beach, east side of Cape Cod, the next afternoon, during the North East gale, and all hands perished. The vessel went to pieces. The Cactus was a fine bark, and had a cargo of flour, corn, and meal for Ireland.

SUDEN DEATH. Benjamin M. Buffington, a member of the House of Representatives from the town of Dartmouth, died at his lodgings in Boston, on the 31st ult. He was thirty-two years of age, and died of scarlet fever and throat distemper. He was in his seat in the House on Saturday, and was taken sick on Sunday.

TO COOK PARSNIPS. Persons who have never eaten parsnips cooked according to the following mode, have no idea what an excellent dish they are. Scrape the parsnips, wash and slice them lengthwise; boil in just water enough to cover them till thoroughly done. Then put in a piece of butter, with a little salt and pepper. Beat up an egg with a spoonful of flour, and pour over them; they are then ready to dish up. Parsnips are likewise very good, split once and roasted with pork in the dripping-pan.

SOUTH SHORE RAILROAD. An act has been reported concerning the South Shore Railroad Corporation by the second special committee of the Legislature on Railways and Canals. The proposed act gives this company authority to commence their railroad at some convenient point on the Old Colony Railroad, in the town of Quincy or Braintree, and to continue the same through the towns of Braintree and Weymouth, by Weymouth Landing and East Weymouth, and north of Locust Hill in North Weymouth, through Hingham, at or near Water street, to some convenient point in Cohasset, and there to terminate, the same; the time for filing the location of, and finally completing, the railroad, is extended one year, in addition to the time mentioned in their original act of incorporation; if, in consequence of the location north of Locust Hill in North Weymouth, it shall be necessary to cross any navigable waters in Weymouth Landing, the said waters may be crossed by a bridge, with a good and sufficient draw, at any place in said landing, not below a point formerly known as Arnold's Point; if any stockholder shall, in consequence of the passage of this act, desire to withdraw his subscription to the capital stock, he may do so by giving notice thereof to the clerk within six months from the passage hereof; and he shall thereupon receive back the full amount of any assessment paid by him.

SECOND TRIAL AND CONVICTION. After five hours consultation, the jury rendered a verdict of guilty against George W. Jerald, who has been on trial, in Boston, for attempting to burn his store, and thereby defraud the Firemen's Insurance Company, seven or eight months ago. The jury very strongly recommended him to the mercy of the Court. On a former trial the result was similar, but the verdict was then set aside on the ground of informality. He has been sentenced to one year hard labor in the House of Correction.

FOR IRELAND. The United States ship James-ton, loaded with provisions for the relief of the suffering Irish, sailed from Boston on Sunday morning last, under the command of R. B. Forbes, Esq. Her cargo consisted of 1,377 barrels bread, 418 casks beans, 88 casks peas, 533 casks and 2,043 bags corn, 100 tierces hams, 400 barrels pork, 723 barrels and 4,888 bags corn meal, flour, oat meal, potatoes, rice, beef, clothing, etc.—in all equal to eight thousand barrels. Her cargo is valued at $35,714.

A young married lady in Ryegate, (Vt.) has made during the past season, from eight cows, seventeen hundred pounds of butter, which has been sold at market at an average price of twenty cents per pound, making the handsome sum of three hundred and forty dollars.

Two lawyers have received the large sum of eight thousand dollars from the corporation of Memphis, (Tenn.), for attending to a recent suit of that city before the Supreme Court of that State, involving the right of the city wharfage. It is stated that the amount of the fee was fixed by a committee of lawyers.

It is proposed that the United States appoint collectors and open custom houses at Matamoros, Tampico, and Vera Cruz, (Mexico) for the transaction of business. The revenue will pay a large portion of the army expenses.

A petition, praying that the present law, which declares invalid all marriages between parties within the prohibited degrees of collateral affinity may be amended so as to legalize marriage with the sister or other more remote relation of a deceased wife, has been opened for signature at the Exchange News Room of London.

The human body contains two hundred and forty bones. There appears to have been no improvement in this machine since its first invention.

The price of bread is now higher in Paris than it has been for the last fifty years.

Dr. Judson and his associates arrived in Burmah, after a passage of one hundred and thirty nine days. Their voyage was a fine one—accommodations excellent. Mrs. Judson had found the cold air of the sea uncongenial, but it was believed that the tropical climate of Burmah would be favorable to her health.

There is to be established at South Trenton, (N. J.) a stock company consisting entirely of colored persons. The object is to carry on the tanning business, with a capital of six thousand dollars, divided into shares of twenty dollars. None but colored persons are permitted to own stock. The shares are nearly all taken up.

The sum of ten thousand and thirty dollars was paid to the state, counties and towns, in this Commonwealth, last year, for pedlers' licences. Of course they did the people out of this sum, in addition to the usual profits.

Influenza and Consumption.

It is indeed a melancholy truth that thousands fall victims to Consumption every year, from no other cause than neglected Colds; yet we find hundreds, nay thousands, who treat such complaints with the greatest indifference, and let them run on for weeks and even months, without thinking of the danger. At first you have what you consider a slight cough or cold; you allow business, pleasure, or carelessness to prevent you giving it any attention; it then settles upon your breast—you become hoarse, have pains in the side or chest, expectorate large quantities of matter, perhaps mixed with blood; a difficulty of breathing ensues, and then you find your own foolish neglect has brought on this complaint. If, then, you value life or health, be warned in time, and don't trifle with your Cold, or trust to any quack nostrum to cure you; but immediately procure a bottle or two of that famous remedy, Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, which is well known to be the most speedy cure ever known, as thousands will testify whose lives have been saved by it.

198 Washington Street, Boston, nearly opposite the Marlboro' Hotel.

THE Chinese Tea Company, has been visited by very many thousands, who are recommending their friends to participate in the advantages and excellencies of the Tea continually selling at this Store. The present rates are:

BLACK TEAS

Are 25, 35, 40, 50, and 60 cents per pound, at Retail.

The Tea at 35 cents is an excellent article for large families. That at 25 cents is strong and good. That at 40 cents has great strength and fine flavor. That at 50 cents is a Fancy Tea of a Hyson flavor, and has given unusual satisfaction.

GREEN TEAS

Are 35, 40, 50, 60, 75, 80, and 90 cents per pound.

The first, second, and third qualities are all strong and good Teas. The remainder are a well selected stock of Hyson, Imperial, Oolong, or Young Hyson; those rare and rich Ceylon Teas, and Gunpowder Teas, all helping to furnish for the fact that

The China Tea Company's Teas are 20 per cent. cheaper than any Grocer's in Town

LA PHILOPOENE.

Some time ago,—we both well know,—
When the moon was brightly beaming,
With dance and song, near all night long
We banished sleep and dreaming.

On that same night, when almost "light,"
With spirits bright about me,
I thought I'd eat an almond sweet,
But not indeed without—thee.

Now 'tis a tale in D'Orray's school
Who thus an almond eat,
I shall on some day a forfeit pay
To the one who first repeats—Philopoe.

Now by St. Paul and apostles all,
You first that word repeated,
So I must pay, well as I may,
The "forfeit," or you'll be cheated.

What shall I do? Good taste! say you!
Shall I throw a gift at random?
"Give something gay, I guess 'twill pay
Though in taste—non disputandum."

Well done! well done! 'tis glorious fun
For those who are not "green,"
To eat the meat of an almond sweet,
And thus get a—Philopoe.

Now lady fair, list to my prayer,
May their gift a tribute be
Of my high respects for sex,
But especially for—thee.

QUEEN VICTORIA.

The following lines were written at the time of the Queen's Coronation, but have not been published.
Victoria, Queen of the beautiful Isles,
The land of our parents' dyer see,
Across the Atlantic we greet thee with smiles,
And send thee our compliments free from the wiles
Of sycophants—listen to me.

The crown of the kingdom has circled thy brow
And thine was the oath to defend
A people who cheerfully paid their vows,
Art married, fair Queen, to Old England thy spouse,
Stand pledged until death to befriend.

The task is most easy, the method is plain;
Endeavor thine husband to please,
The poor and unhappy in mercy sustain
Be grateful to him who sends sunshine and rain,
Seek peace and trust God for success.

F. M. ADLINGTON, Weymouth.

BE ACTIVE.

Be active—be active—
Find something to do,
In digging a clam-bank,
Or tapping a shoe.
Don't stop at the corner
To drag out the day;
Be active, be active,
And work while you may.

'Tis foolish to flatter,
Or lag in the street,
Or walk as if chain shot
Were bound to your feet;
Be active, be active,
And do what you can,
'Tis industry only
That maketh the man.

'Tis industry makes you;
Remember—be wise—
From sloth and from stupor
Awake and arise!
You'll live and be happy,
And never complain
Of the blues or the dumps
Or a dull heavy brain.

ANECDOTES.

Tell a Yankee that it is impossible to do a thing and he will be sure to try. One hearing the old adage that "it is impossible to make a whistle out of a pig's tail," procured one and stripped the skin off whole.
After the same was sufficiently dried in the sun, he found no difficulty in fitting a mouth piece, etc., and now it squeaks most pathetically.

"I say boy, whose horse is that you're riding?"
"Why, it's daddy's." "Who is your daddy?" "Uncle
Peter Jones." "So you are the son of your uncle." "Why, yes, I calculate I am. You see I got to be a widower, and married mother's sister; so I reckon he's my uncle." "Boy, you are not far from a fool." "Well, as we are not more than three feet apart, I think just as you say." "Good morning."
"Good morning. You didn't come it that time, stranger."

"Little boy," said a religious old lady to a ragged and dirty little urchin in the street, "were you ever confirmed?" "No marm," he replied, "but I was vaccinated once."

"Have you dined?" said a loungee to his friend. "I have, upon my honor," replied he. "Then," rejoined the first, "if you have dined upon your honor, I fear you have made a scanty meal."

"Landlord," said a Jonathan, stepping up to the bar in a public house, "I just give you a cent's worth of New England, and put it into two tumblers. Here, Jim, take hold; away with the expense, I say, when a feller is on a bust."

An old lady, after stirring the fire with her knitting needle, proceeded to knit with the poker, and did not discover her error till she commenced scratching her head with it.

A New York paper advertises that the owner of the perpetual motion which had been on exhibition there has absconded without paying the man who turned the crank in the cellar.

THE STANDING CANDIDATE.

At Buffalo Head, Niagara county, State of Missouri, during the canvass of 1844, there was held an extensive Barbecue, and the several candidates for congress, legislature, county officers, etc., were all congregated at this southern point for the purpose of making an immense demonstration.

Hardy, soft, whigs, and Tyleries were represented, and to hear their several expositions of state and general policy, a vast gathering of the Missouri sovereigns had also assembled. While the impatient candidates were awaiting the signal to mount the 'stump,' an odd looking old man made his appearance at the brow of a small hill bounding the place of meeting.

'Hurrah for old Sugar!' shouted an hundred voices, while on, steadily, progressed the object of the cheer.

Sugar, as he was familiarly styled, was an old man, apparently about fifty years of age, and was clad in a coarse suit of brown linsey-woolsey. His pants were patched at each knee, and around the ankles they had worn off into picturesque points—his coat was not of the modern close-fitting cut, but hung in loose, and easy folds upon his broad shoulders, while the total absence of buttons upon this garment, exhibited the owner's contempt for the storm and tempest. A coarse shirt, tied at the neck with a piece of twine, completed his attire.

His head was ornamented with an old woollen cap of diverse colors, below which beamed a broad, humorous countenance, flanked by short, funny little grey whiskers. A few wrinkles marked his brow, but time could not count them as sure chronicles of his progress, for Sugar's hearty sonorous laugh oft drove them from their hiding place. Across his shoulder was thrown a sack, in each end of which he was bearing to the scene of political action a keg of brand new brandy, of his own manufacture, and he strove forward on his moss-shod feet, encumbered as he was, with all the agility of youth.

Sugar had long been the standing candidate of Niagara county for the legislature, and founded his claim to the office upon the fact of his being the first 'squatter' in that county—his having killed the first bear there, ever killed by a white man, and to place his right beyond cavil, he had 'stilled' the first keg of whiskey! These were strong claims, which, urged in his comic, rhyming manner, would have swept the 'diggins,' but Sugar, when the canvass opened, always yielded his claim to some liberal purchaser of his fluid, and duly announced himself for the next term.

'Here you air, old fellow!' shouted an acquaintance, 'allays on hand 'bout 'lection.'

'Well, Nat,' said Sugar, 'you've jest told the truth as easy as ef you'd taken sum of my amixtur—'

'What politicians congregate, I'm allays that at any rate.'

'Set him up!—set the old fellow up somehow, and let us take a universal liquor!' was the general shout.

'Hold on, boys,—keep cool, and shady,' said old Sugar, 'whar's the candidates?—none of your splurging round till I git an appropriation for the sperits. Send 'em along and we'll negotiate for the fluid, arter which I shall gin 'em my instructions, and they may then percede'

'To talk away like all crea-tion, What they knows about the nation.'

The candidates were accordingly summoned up to pay for Sugar's portable grocery, and to please the crowd and gain the good opinion of the owner, they made up a purse and gathered round him. Sugar had placed his two kegs on a broad stump and seated himself astride of them, with a small tin cup in his hand, and a paper containing brown sugar lying before him; each of his kegs was furnished with a spigot, and as soon as the money for the whole contents was paid in, Sugar commenced addressing the crowd as follows:—

'Boys, fellars, and candidates,' said he, 'I Sugar, am the first white man ever seed in these your diggings—I killed the first bar ever a white man skinned in this county, and I kallilate I has hurt the feelings of his relations sum sense, as the bar-skin linin' of my cabin will testify,—'sides that, I'm the first manufacturer of whiskey in the range of this district, and powerful mixer it is too, as the hull bilin' of fellars in this crowd will declar'—and more'n that, I'm a candidate for the legislature, and intend to gin up my claim, this term, to the fellar who kin talk the pootyest;—now finally at the end, boys, this mixer' of mine will make a fellar talk as iley as goose-grease, as sharp as lightning, and as per-suadin' as a young gal at a quiltin', so don't sper it while it lasts, and the candidates kin drink fust, 'cause they've got to do the talkin'.'

Having finished his charge he filled the tin cup full of whiskey, put in a handful of brown sugar, and with his forefinger stirred up the sweetening, then surveying the candidates, he pulled off his cap, remarking, as he did so:—

'Old age allays afore beauty!—your daddy fust, in course,' then holding up the cup he offered a toast, as follows:—

'Here is to the string that binds the States; may it never be bit apart by political rats! Then holding up the cup to his head he took a hearty swig, and passed it to the next odd looking candidate. While they were tasting it, Sugar kept up a fire of lingo at them.

'Pass it along lively, gentlemen, but don't sper the fluid. You can't help tellin' truth arter you've swaller'd enough of my mixer, jest for this reason, it's been 'stilled in honesty, rectified in truth, and poured out with wisdom! Take a leetle drop more,' said he to a fastidious candidate, whose stomach turned at the thought of the way the mixer was mixed. 'Why, Mister,' said Sugar, coaxingly,

'Ef you war a baby, jest new born, 'Twould do you good, this juicy corn.'

'No more, I thank you,' said the candidate, drawing back from the proffer.

Sugar winked his eye at some of his cronies, and muttered—'He's got an aristocracy stomach, and can't go the native lickin'.' Then dismissing the candidates, he shouted: 'Crowd up, constituents, into a circle, and let's begin fair—your daddy fust, allays; and mind no changin' places in the circle to git the sugar in the bottom of the cup. I know you're arter it, Tom Williams, but none on your yankeein' round to git the sweetnin'—it's all syrup, fellars, 'cause Sugar made and mixed it. The gals at the frolics allays git me to prepare the cordials, 'cause they say I make it mity drinkable. Who next? What, you, old Ben Dent! Well, hold your hoss for a minit, and I'll strengthen the tin with a spec more, just because you kallilate the vally of the lickin, and do it jestiss!'

Thus chatted Sugar as he measured out and sweetened up the contents of his kegs, until all who would drink had taken their share, and then the crowd assembled around the speakers. We need not say that the virtues of each political party were duly set forth to the hearers; that follows as a matter of course, candidates dwell upon the strong points of their argument, always. One among them, however, more than his compeers, attracted the attention of our friend Sugar, not because he had highly commended the contents of the kegs, but because he painted with truth and feeling the claims of western pioneers! Among these he ranked the veteran Col. Johnson and his compatriots, and as he rehearsed their struggles in defence of their fire-side, how they had been trained to war by conflict with the ruthless savage, their homes oft desolated, and their children murdered,—yet still, ever foremost in the fight, and last to retreat, winning the heritage of those broad valleys for their children, against the opposing arm of the red man, though aided by the civilized power of Great Britain and her serried cohorts of trained soldiery! We say as he dwelt upon these themes, Sugar's eyes would fire up, and then, at some touching passage of distress dwell upon by the speaker, tears would course down his rude cheek.

When the speaker concluded, he wiped his eyes with his hard hand, and said to those around him:—

'That air true as the yearth!—thar's suthin' like talk in that fellar!—he's the right breed, and his old daddy had told him about them times. So did mine relate 'em to me, how the only sister I ever had, when a baby, had her brains dashed out by one of them red skinned devils! But didn't we pepper them fur it? Didn't I help the old man, afore he grew too weak to hold his shootin' iron, to send a few on 'em off to rub out the account? Well I did!—'Hey!' and shutting his teeth together he yelled through them the exultation of vengeance.

The speaking being done, candidates and hearers gathered around Sugar, to hear his comments upon the speeches, and to many inquiries of how he liked them, the old man answered:—

'They were all pooty good, but that tall fellar they call Tom, from St. Louis; you I mean, stranger,' pointing at the same time to the candidate, 'you jest scart up my feelin's to the right pint—you jest made me feel woffless as when I and old dad war arter the red varmits; and now whar'll you take? I'm going to publicly decline in your favor.'

Pouring out a tin full of the liquor, and stirring it as before, he stood upright upon the stump, with a foot on each side of his legs, and drawing off his cap, toasted:—

'The memory of the western pioneers.' A shout responded to this toast, which echoes far away in the depths of the adjoining forest, and seemed to awaken a response from the spirits of those departed heroes.

'That's the way to sing it out, boys,' responded old Sugar, 'such a yell as that would scart an inimy into ager fits, and make the United States Eagle scream Hail Columby.'

'While you're up Sugar,' said one of them, 'give us a stump speech yourself.'

'Bravo!' shouted an hundred voices, 'a speech from Sugar.'

'Agreed, boys,' said the old man, 'I'll jest gin you a few words to wind up with, so keep quiet while your daddy's talkin'.'

'Some tell it out jest like a song, I'll gin it to you sweet and strong.'

'The only objection ever made to me in this ar county, as a legislatur', was made by the women, 'cause I war a bachelor, and I never told you afore why I re-mained in the state of number one—no feller stays single pre-meditated, and, in course, a hansom fellar like me, who all the gals declar' to be as enticin' as a jay-bird, warn't goin' to stay alone, ef he could help it. I did see a creature once, named Sofy Mason, up the Cumberland, nigh on to Nashville, Tennessee, that I tuk an orful hankerin' arter, and I set to lookin' anxious fur matrimony, and gin to go regular to meetin', and tuk to dressin' tremengeous finified, jest to see ef I could win her good opinion. She did git to lookin' at me, and one day, cumin' from meetin', she was takin' a look at me, a kind of shy, jest as a hoss does at suthin he's scart at, when arter chimpin' a distance for a while, I sidled up to her and blarsted out a few words about the surmin—she said yes, but cus me ef I know whether that war the right answer or not, and I'm a thinkin' she didn't know then, nuther! Well, we larked and talked a leetle all the way along to her daddy's, and thar I gin her the best bend I had in me, and raised my bran new hat as pert and perlit as a minister, lookin' all the time so enticin' that I sot the gal a trembin'.' Her old daddy had a powerful numerous set of healthy niggers, and lived right adjinin' my place, while on tother side lived Jake Simons—a sneakin', cute varmint, who war wusser than a miser fur stinginess, and no sooner did this cussid earprint see me slidin' up to Sofy, than he went up, too, and sot himself to work to cut me out. That ar war a struggle ekkil to the battle of Orleans. Fust sum new fix up of Jake's would take her eye, and then I'd sport suthin' to outshine him, until Jake at last gin in tryin' to outdres me, and sot to thinkin' of suthin' else. Our farms war the same number of acres, and we both owned three niggers apiece. Jake knew that Sofy and her dad kept a sharp eye out for the main chance, so he thort he'd clear me out by buyin' another nigger; but I jest foller'd suit and bought one the day arter he got his, so he had no advantage thar; he then got a cow, and so did I, and jest about then both our pussies gin out. This put Jake to his wits' end, and I war a wonderin' what in the yearth he would try next. We stood so, hip and thigh, fur about two weeks, both on us talkin' sweet to Sofy, whenever we could git her alone. I thort I seed that Jake, the sneakin' cuss, war gittin' a mite ahead of me, 'cause his tongue was so iley; however, I didn't let on, but kept a top eye on him. One Sunday mornin' I war a little late to meetin', and when I got thar the fust thing I seed war Jake Simons, sittin close bang up in Sofy, in the same pew with her daddy! I biled a spell with wrath, and then turned sour; I could not taste myself! Thar they war, singin' himes out of the same book. Je-cuminy, fellars, I was so enormous mad that the new silk handkerchief round my neck lost its color! Arter meetin' out they walked, linked arms, a smilin' and lookin' as pleased as a young couple at their first christenin', and Sofy turned her 'cold shoulder' at me so orful pited, that I witeded down and gin up right straight—Jake had her, thar war no disputin' it! I headed towards home, with my hands as fur in my trousers pockets as I could push 'em, swarin' all the way that she war the last one that would ever git a chance to rile up my feelin's.

Passin' by Jake's plantation I looked over the fence, and thar stood an explanation of the matter, right facin' the road, whar every one was passin' could see it—his consarned cow was tied to a stake in the garden, with a most promising calf alongside of her! The calf jest soured my milk, and made Sofy think, that a fellar who war allays gettin' ahead like Jake, war a right smart chance for a lively husband!

A shout of laughter here drowned Sugar's voice, and as soon as silence was restored, he added in a solemn tone, with one eye shut, and his forefinger pointing at his auditory.

'What is a cussed sight wusser than his gittin' Sofy war the fact, that he borrowed that calf the night before from Dick Darkley! Arter the varmint got Sofy hitched, he told the joke all over the settlement, and the boys never seed me arterwards that they didn't b-a-a-h at me fur lettin' a calf cut me out of a gal's affections. I'd a shot Jake, but I thort it war a free country, and the gal had a right to her choice without bein' made a widder, so I jest sold out and travelled! I've allays thort since then, boys, that twinin war a good deal like lickin, ef you love 'em too hard thar sure to throw you some way.'

'Then here's to twinin, then to lickin, That's suthin' swimm'in can be slicker.'

CABBAGES. Select new ground for cabbages. Virgin soil is best. In selecting your plants be careful and reject, as worthless, all which have 'stump feet,' or stems in any way deformed. With virgin soil and good plants of a good variety you will seldom fail of a crop. It is an excellent plan to put a few ashes or a handful of lime in the hill, as it serves to stimulate the energies of the soil, and to ward off the evils resulting from the labors of lice and worms.

MILDEW ON GOOSEBERRIES. The great difficulty with which gooseberry growers in this country are obliged to contend, is the mildew. The Farmer's Gazette states that the mildew is prevented by sprinkling fine salt around the bushes, or where it can be had, by placing sea weed around them.

CHARACTERISTICS OF MAN. Somebody says that man is an odd genius—made up of all kinds of materials. He is brave to-day and gay to-morrow; in the suds of despondency this moment, and the next sailing on the car of hope. Now passion rules him—anon, a child is leading him. Last month he made his fortune, and will lose it next. Is not man a queer compound? An odd genius thus defines the creature—

'At ten, a child; at twenty, wild;
'At thirty, time, if ever;
'At forty, wise; at fifty, rich;
'At sixty, good, or never.'

EXERCISE.

Children and youth of both sexes, require much exercise in the open air, for the healthful and symmetrical development of their bodies and for the establishment of vigorous constitutions. Children are instinctively inclined to action;—even before they can stand or sit alone, they love to keep their little hands almost continually in motion, while they are awake; and as soon as they are able to run alone, they delight to be constantly in action;—and when they are old enough to be abroad in the open air, they find their greatest enjoyment in those amusements and sports which are of the most active kind. Action is, therefore, as instinctively natural to children as breathing, and it is unnatural and improper to restrain them from it, and to keep them in a state of confinement or inaction, for any considerable time. Their little bodies become painfully weary, if they are compelled to remain in one position for half an hour at a time, and it is cruel to repress their instinctive desire for action, beyond what is necessary for their proper discipline. Girls should be allowed as much freedom of action in childhood, as boys, and they should be encouraged to exercise freely in the open air, while their bodies are growing. Not only their own individual welfare requires this, but the good of the race demands it.

Aged people, after they have retired from the active employments of life, must keep up their regular exercise, or they will soon become feeble and infirm. It is impossible for the vigor and activity of the body to be long preserved without exercise. Walking and horseback riding are the best modes of exercise for the aged. Riding in easy carriages will do for very feeble persons, who are able to take an airing; but it affords little exercise to the body;—plain wagons without springs are far more beneficial as means of exercise to those who can bear them. With the aged, as with all others, exercise is most salutary when accompanied with cheerfulness. Occasional hilarity and a hearty laugh, healthfully exhilarate and exercise the whole system. It should also be remembered by the aged, as a most important truth, that the regular exercise of the mind is not only the necessary means of preventing the rapid decline of the intellectual powers in advanced years, but that it also serves in no small measure to prolong life and enjoyment.

The importance of exercise as the natural tonic of the body, is greatly overlooked and exceedingly neglected, in the treatment of chronic diseases of every kind; and irritating and deleterious stimulants are employed to produce those effects in the system which can healthfully result only from proper exercise and pure air. Dyspeptic and other chronic invalids ought never to hope for health by any means, without exercise. The beneficial effects of horseback riding, to those who are laboring under pulmonary consumption, are often truly astonishing. I have known invalids afflicted with this dreadful disease, when they are too feeble to mount the horse without help, by riding a short distance the first time, and gradually increasing the length of the ride daily, become able, in the course of two weeks, to ride twenty miles without stopping by the way, and feel more vigorous at the end of the journey, than at the beginning;—I have known instances where such individuals have made journeys on horseback, of several hundred miles, and returned to their homes and friends almost perfectly restored to health. Indeed, I am entirely confident, that if strict simplicity and propriety of diet, and riding on horseback to the full extent of the patient's ability, will not cure pulmonary consumption, no earthly means can cure it;—and I am very certain that most other means employed in modern times, while they may perhaps, seem to alleviate the symptoms, really aggravate the disease and hasten the patient to the grave.—Dr. Sylvester Graham.

LICENSE LAWS.

The Policy and the Administration of the Laws of this State in relation to the sale of Liquors, since 1832. The present law (47th chap. of the Revised Statutes) regulating the sale of spirits in quantities less than twenty-eight gallons, was passed in 1832. At the time of its enactment it was familiarly called the "grocers' or Harry Williams law." It was made by and for practical men, and for practical purposes. It was intended and it does authorize the sale of liquors by retail.

The provisions of that law are sufficiently explicit, and clearly indicate the policy of the Legislature, which the law was intended to carry out in a consistent and practical manner. So long as the law was administered agreeably to its provisions, no complaints were ever heard from any quarter. There was no apparent or positive inconsistency or absurdity developed by its administration; consequently, no one had any ground or cause of complaint. The policy of the government was liberal and decidedly conservative—fully recognizing the prescriptive and sacred right of property, and the law corresponded with the policy so long as it was administered according to its provisions.

This policy, and the consistent administration of the law, continued down to the year 1838. Previous to that time, all applicants for licenses possessing a good moral character were licensed, because both the language of the statutes and the intention of the Legislature were so plain, (and are they not equally so now?) that, if honestly and fairly interpreted, forbade any other result. No one presumed or thought of making it a law of prohibition, because it was not intended to be such a law; in fact, it cannot be made to accomplish such a result, without doing great violence to the intention and the policy of the Legislature, and still greater violence to the language of the statute itself. If the 47th chapter is susceptible of being so construed or administered as to be a law of "stringent, thorough prohibition," where was the necessity, what was the object, in passing the fifteen gallon law in '38? and what did the people gain by repealing the fifteen gallon law in 1840?

In 1838, the Legislature adopted a new policy, and repealed all laws regulating the sale of spirits, and adopted a new law, in conformity with the new policy, viz. the law of '38, which was intended to be a stringent prohibitory law.

Here again, we see that with the change of policy, came also a corresponding change in the law. The law was made to conform to and carry out the policy which the legislature, in its wisdom, then established, and the stringent law of prohibition, known as the fifteen gallon law, was enacted.

In 1840, the legislature again changed the policy of the government, and unconditionally repealed the prohibitory law of '38, and, according to the theory of our courts, "returned to and adopted the old policy of 1832." No other legislation upon the subject took place in 1840, but the repeal of the law of '38.

Now, if, by the repeal of the law of '38, we are compelled (by questionable authority we confess) to fall back on the law of '32, (which was repealed in '38 and which has never been revived by legislative action) have we not the clearest right to expect, and in fact ought we not to realize, the same LIBERAL POLICY which (under the rule of construction revives the law of '32) was thus, by implication, established, and which accompanied the administration of that law down to 1838?

If the policy of the government has been radically changed since 1840, from that of practical regulation and sale, to that of rigid and stringent prohibition, then, does not common honesty in legislation, and a proper regard for legislative consistency, demand a change of the law, viz. a law of prohibition? There can be no honest escape from this conclusion.

No man can read the 47th chapter of the Revised Statutes, and say that the Legislature ever intended by its enactments to prohibit the sale of liquors. If any one shall say that that was the intention of the Legislature in passing that law, then, they virtually charge the General Court with practicing a deception—a fraud upon the intelligence and common sense of the people, by using language, which, according to the universally admitted meaning, provides for one thing, while in fact it was intended to accomplish another and quite a different thing. We believe, however, that the apparent liability or exposure to such a charge arises from other and quite different causes, which, when seen and understood, will constitute additional reasons for legislative action on this subject.

Is it not the fact that the County Commissioners, Mayor and Aldermen, etc., as the administrators of that law, by their practical non compliance with its express provisions, virtually repudiate or nullify the plain and manifest intention of the Legislature, and thus subject the legislation of the state to this unpleasant, not to say dishonorable imputation?

Those who defend the administration of the 47th chapter as a prohibitory law, virtually charge the Legislature with that intentional deception, or they must admit that, according to the law, the Mayor and Aldermen and County Commissioners have done wrong in not granting licenses agreeably to the provisions of that statute.

Can a law which intentionally authorizes and expressly provides a wholesome system of regulating the sale of an article, if it be honestly and fairly administered according to the

LETTER FROM A VOLUNTEER.

BRAZOS ISLAND, March 16, 1847.

FRIEND GREEN—We anchored off this Island on the 15th inst., all well, and in good spirits, after a short and pleasant passage of nineteen days. We were not however permitted to pass the Gulf Stream without receiving a blast from 'Old Boreas' who showed us his grim visage for a few hours; but fortunately we escaped without injury except the derangement of some of our stomachs.

Last evening the steamer Col. Stevens landed our Companies, A and D, once more safe on 'terra firma,' being the first of the Massachusetts volunteers arrived. This is one of the most barren places I have ever been permitted to visit. It is nothing more or less than a sand bank; not a tree, or even a shrub, to be seen. Nothing greets the eyes but the paraphernalia of our profession. We camped in our wagon last night in preference to the houses, which at first sight are not very inviting, neither do they improve on a closer inspection, as they are built on the 'Jack Straw' order of architecture, with rough boards, spacious and airy;—a sufficient space between the boards to admit of a safe retreat for the occupants, should they be attacked at the 'front door.'

The crack hotel of this place is somewhat of a novel concern; it is the remains of an old steam boat hauled high and dry on the beach. Curiosity led me to inspect the interior of this establishment, and after satisfying my curiosity, called for some refreshments and found nothing but molasses gingerbread, and that at fifty cents a sheet.

Bread stuffs are very high, as well as all other kinds of provisions. I am informed there are about two hundred Mexicans who reside on the island, living in tents or huts much resembling our pig pens and equally as stylish.

There are about fifty sail of vessels lying at anchor in the Rhonds, most of all which are employed by government. There is no safe harbor or shelter for the shipping at this island, which accounts for the many wrecks and fragments of vessels which literally cover the beach. The news of Gen. Taylor's great victory at Buena Vista was received here a few days since, and of course caused great rejoicing among us. We are all anxious to have a view of that "lion hearted and eagle eyed veteran."

The Virginian regiment have landed some ten or twelve of their men who have the small pox. The North Carolina regiment marched from this place yesterday. I begin to flatter myself a well trained old soldier, rather than the wild, hurried and reckless untrained volunteer. To-night or to-morrow commences a new era in my life. We take up our line of march for the Rio Grande, distant nine miles from this place, thence we take steam to Matamoros, where we are to be garrisoned for some time.

Crane and Prior are both in good health and wide awake. Excuse haste.

Yours respectfully,

WILLIAM WOOD.

MEXICAN TARIFF. The Secretary of the United States Treasury has issued his tariff of duties upon articles entering Mexican ports, and the Secretary of the Navy, under the direction of the President, has given orders that the duties shall be enforced. Thus the Mexican ports will be opened to the commerce of all neutral nations, and the duties collected applied to the prosecution of the war. This cannot but have a favorable result.

GENERAL COURT. In looking over the proceedings of the Legislature the past week, we do not find anything of particular note. The most important subjects are still in the possession of committees, and when they report then some business of interest will be transacted. The great project of a central railroad, connecting Boston with New York, has not yet been brought before the Legislature by the committee who have the matter under advisement.

We are informed that a charter has been granted for the Quincy Point Railroad.

CONNECTICUT. The whigs have elected a Governor, a majority in both branches of the Legislature, and chosen the four members of Congress. Last year the State government was in the possession of the democrats, but the entire delegation in Congress were then whigs.

RHODE ISLAND. The whigs have carried the Governor, Legislature, and one if not the whole delegation to Congress.

Dear Sir—Having used Dr. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY, with great benefit to myself, I cheerfully comply with your request to give my testimony in favor of it. Some time since I took cold, and it settled on my lungs: I was troubled for several weeks with a very bad cough, raised blood several times, and had all the alarming symptoms attending confirmed Consumption. I despaired of recovery. After trying various remedies in vain, I obtained a bottle of your Balsam; I took three bottles, and to my astonishment was entirely cured. VICIOUS EXCESSES.

My attention has recently been called to the subject of secret vices, by noticing, in one of the papers, the death of Monroe Edwards, who died lately at the Sing Sing State Prison, New York, of consumption brought on by indulgence in solitary habits. The community are not aware to how great an extent this degrading vice is practised. By the reports from the Worcester Insane Hospital, it will be learned that a large proportion of the cases brought to that institution are traced solely to this cause. Does it not become philanthropists to look into and cause such works to be put into the hands of our youth as will inform them on this subject, without corrupting their minds. Such a work is published by Messrs. Chip, Broaders & Co. of Boston, of which some 30,000 copies have been sold. This work, entitled "Manhood. Causes of its Premature Decline," etc., is translated from the French of Deslandes, and has been highly recommended by Dr. Woodward of Worcester; Doane of New York; Winslow Lewis, Jr., of Boston, and other eminent physicians. We do not hesitate to say, that aside from humanity, directors of our public institutions would in a pecuniary point of view find it to their advantage to put one of these books into the hands of every inmate in their establishments; for what ever contributes to the health of those under their charge, enables them to derive a greater amount of receipts for their labor—while, on the other hand, the poor ignorant person, addicted to the vice, unaware of what is the cause of his emaciation and weakness, is daily becoming not only a burden to himself, but an expense to those who are to provide for him. c. POETRY.

OUR COUNTRY WRONG OR RIGHT?

The strain the patriot poet sang,
That sounded round his fiery lakes,
And o'er the misty hills top rung,
On distant shores the echo wakes.

"With all thy faults I love thee still,
Dear Scotia, oh my native land!"
For weal or woe, for good or ill,
He gave his heart and gave his hand.

He loved her still despite her crimes,
And with a child-like love caress'd;
The sorrow muffled o'er his rhymes
He would not foul the parent nest.

He could not tear his heart away,
And curse the land that gave him birth,
On act the traitor and betray
The patriot's dearest spot on earth.

This is that true and constant love,
By every honest patriot shown,
The spirit that would faithful prove,
Though all the world beside should frown.

But every nation sins at times,
What then should patriot hearts oppose?
Rebuke and lash them for their crimes,
Not give the scourge to heartless foes.

These words, "Our country wrong or right,"
Reecho'd now from every hill,
If view'd but in a candid light
They here express "I love thee still."

"I love thee still, my native land,
With all thy faults," tho' great they be,
Nor would I with thy loven band,
To bow thy neck to any knee.

'Tis nature's universal truth,
We love our own howe'er defiled;
Wouldst prove it? seize that guilty youth!
Strike down that mother's erring child.

Would not the Amazonian light
Flash from the mildest mother's eye?
Would she not guard him, wrong or right,
And every means to save him try?

The patriot in as dear a light,
Beholds his country, good or ill;
She is his mother, wrong or right;
He loves, supports and guards her still.

F. M. ARLINGTON, Weymouth.

THE SAILING OF THE JAMESTOWN.

She speeds before the western winds,
A black, yet beautiful thing,
As the dark cloud that veils the sky,
Whose thunder roars, and lightning fly,
Yet feeds with showers
The waiting flowers
That also were withering;
Her armament is voiceless now, no deathly flash is there,
The sea tribes sport about her bow, as insects in the air.
No Neptune lends his current too,
To hasten her along,
The nereids, from their depths of blue
Send up a cheering song,
For she is on a voyage of love, the love that nations binds.

To her, unstained with precious blood,
That spot hath lent its name,
Where Pocahontas threw her life
Between the victim and the knife,
Where first was flung
The seed whence sprung
A people none can name.

How fit to carry this our aid, the gift of son to sire;
Never was filial duty paid with satisfaction higher.
She takes our plenty's overflow,
To one whose steps ascend
Into the vale of years must go,
Success her errand crown!
And joy to want's pale sons, go with her o'er the flood.

No hirelings walk her quarter-deck
To conquer or to kill,
But she is manned by willing braves,
And easily she walks the waves,
As if she spoke
Who on the lake
Said to them, "Peace, be still!"

That eastern Star they worship well, who follow out
His plan,
Who came the Father's will to tell, how man should act
Toward man.

So eastward stream our stars above,
To tell the nations round,
Vessels of war on deeds of love,
Must ever more be bound
Amid the darkness of our night, we hail this glittering speck. J. R. B.

ANECDOTES.

At a store in Ogdensburg may be seen a little dog whose tail curls naturally so tight that he has never been able to put his hind legs to the ground.

Will you lend father your newspaper sir? he only just wants to read it. "Yes, my boy; and ask him to lend me his dinner—I only just want to eat it."

A young lady about to sue for a breach of promise, placed the love letters she had received in a bag, for the purpose of producing them in court; when, and over the mountain to see the sun rise. It's dreadful stretching work.

It is said that the reason why the Vermont and
New Hampshire boys are so tall, is because they are in the habit of drawing themselves up as to peep over the mountains to see the sun rise. It's dreadful stretching work.

A dandy once remarked that he never saw a pig-sty: "Where the d—l were you raised, then?" said a wicked wag at his side.

THE PAST.

I love the past. There is something serene and calm in looking back on days gone by and contemplating events which will never return. "The past for the future for youth." So it may be, yet, young as I am, I find much to look back upon, even in my short life. The days of boyhood with all their youthful aspirations, so full of fun, life and gaiety, furnish food for reflection for many a dreary day. It may be that I am of a contemplative nature, but there's nothing I like so well as to sit down some cold, cheerless day, when the elements of nature are at war without, and muse over the past. I recall many an event of my youth. I bring back to my mind old companions, now nearly forgotten; a jest, a by-word, which then conveyed no sense to the ear, now returns freighted with meaning. It has developed character, it has separated friends or perchance changed the current of a whole life. Then I never even thought of the cause; the effect now furnishes me with much that is interesting to reflect upon. I can look over old papers with a relish almost insane; every word, every line brings to my mind something to bind me strongly with the past. Do I think of sad events, the effect is still the same. I can weep over the past rather than the present. The future is all phantasm, all uncertain; the past is all tangible, all reality. There may be something glorious in hope, but there is something calm and beautiful in memory. What would an old man's life be without the past to linger and recline upon? This life presents no future to him. Memory floats over the days gone never to return and the sunny spots in it are the only things which bind him to earth. It is not till we become aged, in fact, that we learn to appreciate past enjoyment. In youth, our minds naturally tend towards the future as if there was a something to be grasped which once possessed would crown the summer of our lives. In pursuit of this phantom present happiness glides by us unobserved, unappreciated. Yet how few attain this longing of their souls! How many are disappointed! The past all can contemplate with feelings of pleasure. There is always some bright spot in a life, let it be ever so beclouded with sin and misery, which will call up better feelings in a man. It is often the last link which binds him to a lost conscience, his only incentive to a virtuous hereafter. Let the future excite, the past pacify!

TESTIMONY OF RESPECT.

At a meeting of the Officers of the Total Abstinence and the Washington Total Abstinence Societies of Quincy, held at the house of Seth Adams, on Monday evening, April 12th, 1847, the death of Mr. Elisha Marsh was announced by Jonathan Baxter, President of the Total Abstinence Society and presiding officer for the evening.

Whereas, it has pleased God in his righteous providence to remove, by death, from our midst, our respected friend and worthy brother in the cause of benevolence and philanthropy, Mr. Elisha Marsh, thereby filling our hearts with sadness, and causing us to feel that a veteran in the cause of temperance, and a warm and ardent supporter of all those enterprises which have for their aim the moral elevation of man, has fallen; therefore

Resolved—That we, the Officers of the Total Abstinence and the Washington Total Abstinence Society of Quincy, feel constrained to acknowledge the Providence of God which has thrown so large a portion of this community into mourning.

Resolved—That we cherish sentiments of high respect and sincere affection for the memory of our departed friend, who for a long train of years has shown himself the most cheerful and willing supporter of the temperance cause, and whose hand, whose heart, and whose purse, have ever been ready, as circumstances required, to forward this noble and glorious enterprise.

Resolved—That we tender to Mrs. Lucy Marsh, and other remaining friends of our lamented husband, assurances of our deepest sympathy in this affliction which an all-wise Providence has sent upon them, and of our readiness to do every thing in our power to alleviate their sorrows on this mournful occasion.

Resolved—That as a manifestation of respect, we, the Officers of the two temperance Societies of this place, will attend the funeral and follow the remains of our departed friend to his final resting place.

Voted—That a copy of the foregoing Preamble and Resolutions, signed by the chairman and secretary of this meeting, be transmitted to the widow of our deceased friend, and that they be offered to the editors of the Quincy Patriot, the New England Washingtonian, and the Temperance Standard, for publication; and also to be entered on the Records of the Temperance Societies.

JONATHAN BAXTER, Chairman.
SETH ADAMS, Secretary.

The Barnstable Patriot learns that the directors of the Old Colony Railroad propose to put on the route between Barnstable and Plymouth, the ensuing season, a steamboat to connect with the railroad to Boston.

Hon. Nathaniel B. Borden has been chosen a Director in the Fall River Railroad, to fill a vacancy, and subsequently unanimously chosen President.

The Aldermen of Salem have licensed one innholder and sixteen retailers to sell spirits in that city.

CAPTURE OF VERA CRUZ. The disembarkation of the American troops was on the 9th and 10th ult.—the investment of the city on the 12th and 13th—the trenches opened on the 18th in the night—and the city summoned to surrender on the 22d. On the 24th, a naval battery was opened—25th, another battery opened—a breach made in the walls of the city, and the fire very destructive. On the 26th, early in the morning, surrender tendered of the city and castle, and capitulation signed at noon—the garrison, four thousand men, laid down their arms as prisoners of war, and sent to their homes on parole—five general, sixty superior and two hundred and seventy-five company officers being among the prisoners. Gen. Scott took his station in the city, and Gen. Worth in the castle. Total loss of Americans in the whole time, sixty-five killed and wounded—that of the Mexicans is said to exceed one thousand, more than one half of which were women and children.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT. The anniversaries of the National and New York State Societies for the Abolition of Capital Punishment, will be held in the city of New York, the ensuing month. The State Society meets on Monday evening, May 10th, the National Society on the Wednesday evening following. A general invitation is extended to every friend of the cause to be present at these meetings.

LICENSES. We see it stated, that a petition of Hon. Harrison Gray Otis and others has been recently presented to the City Council of Boston, in favor of licensing a suitable number of discreet and responsible persons to sell spirituous liquors by retail.

FIRE IN THE BAY. The light seen in this place last Tuesday evening was occasioned by the burning of the "old fog," or last year's grass, upon Lovell's Island, which had been set on fire, and many acres were burnt over.

TEMPERANCE DEFEATED. In the State of Delaware, the people have lately voted on the question of granting licenses for the retail of spirituous liquors, and have decided by a majority of five hundred against the temperance movement.

NEW YORK CHARTER ELECTION. The whigs have accomplished a complete victory in the city of New York. Their candidate for Mayor, was elected by a handsome majority. In the Common Council, eleven whig Aldermen and twelve Assistants are chosen to six democratic Aldermen and six Assistants; the Natives have one Alderman. Commissioner was elected by about two thousand majority.

LADIES' EXCHANGE. Messrs. George W. Warren & Co., whose advertisement will be found in our advertising columns, offer great inducements to purchasers of foreign and domestic Goods. All who visit the city to make purchases should certainly visit their establishment.

THE VOLUNTEERS. We have been favored with the perusal of a letter from Capt. Ashley, of Company C, Massachusetts Regiment, to a friend in this town who has a relative in his Company. It is dated Brazos, March 23d, states that his command is in good health—that they had a passage of twenty six days, and that apparent happiness pervades every breast. May the best of fortunes attend our friend, Capt. A.

DEATH OF A RAILROAD PASSENGER. The relatives of the late Dr. Henry D. Hitchcock of Middleboro', who was killed on the 23d of February last, by a collision of cars on the Fall River Railroad, have made an adjustment of the claims. The company, through their Treasurer, have paid to the legal claimants the sum of four thousand five hundred dollars, and have received a discharge from any further liability.

DIVISION OF WEYMOUTH. It is stated that at a recent meeting in Weymouth (held at the South Parish) a resolve in favor of a division of that town was passed by a majority of some twenty-five votes. A committee of five—Hon. Appleton Howe, Lovell Bicknell, John W. Loud, Lemuel Torrey, and Minot Tirrell—were chosen, to petition the Legislature for a division of the town on the north line of the south parish.

DISPLAY OF ENGINES. The Firewards of Hingham, at a late meeting, voted to invite the several Engine Companies of that town, to meet for practice, on the first Tuesday in May, at two o'clock in the afternoon, on the Broad Bridge.

ANTI-SLAVERY MEETING. The annual meeting of the Norfolk County Anti-Slavery Society will be held at Dedham, in Temperance Hall, on Thursday, April 29th, at nine o'clock, in the forenoon. Mr. Garrison and Mr. Phillips of Boston, will be present, and it is expected that Mr. Douglass will arrive in time to attend the meeting. Other speakers will be hereafter announced.

THE FALL RIVER LINE. The new steamer Bay State will start on the Fall River and Newport line with the Massachusetts early in May. The Bay State is three hundred feet long and forty five feet beam, arranged in splendid style, with fifty state rooms and five hundred berths. She has extra life boats and life preservers, and is fitted with masts to carry sail if the engines are disabled.

CONSTITUTIONAL AND PROPER. The Washington Union publishes 'general orders' issued by Maj. Gen. Scott, one of which directs Brigadier General Worth, as Governor of the city of Vera Cruz, to establish a temporary and moderate tariff of duties on imports (not from the United States,) the proceeds of which are to be applied to the sick and wounded Americans and to the indigent inhabitants. What will the Anti-American portion of the press say to the orders of their champion?

GENERAL COURT. The bill to incorporate the Quincy Mutual Fire Insurance Company has passed to be enacted.

We were rather premature in stating that a charter had been granted for the Quincy Point Railroad, but we now notice that the bill has passed to be enacted in both branches.

The consideration of the bill to incorporate the Norfolk County Railroad Company, and of the reports of leave to withdraw on the petitions of C. C. P. Hastings and others, Otis Pettee and others, and Thomas H. Perkins and others, was assigned to Friday last.

GO AND SEE. We notice by the Boston papers that Mrs. Anderson takes a benefit at the National Theatre, on Monday evening next. It is simply sufficient to announce that in conjunction with her appears Mrs. Pelly, and no two actresses of America stand higher or shine more brilliant as "particular and eminent stars." They shortly visit Europe, and a goodly welcome should greet them on their present appearance. Go and see them.

The new territory extending south west of Lake Superior is to be called Minesota, which a Western paper says means 'skunk.'

Many of the tenants on the Van Rensselaer manor lands, are purchasing the title to the property they occupy, at two dollars per acre.

Gold of the value of more than five millions of dollars was at the last accounts on its way to St. Petersburg, from the mines of Siberia.

John B. Gough has recently been lecturing in Rochester, (N. Y.) with great success. The receipts amounted to more than three hundred dollars. He was paid twenty-five dollars an evening for three lectures, and was complimented by a present of one hundred dollars from a gentleman of that city.

The month of March just past, has been (with the exception of March, 1843,) the coldest within ten years.

Elihu Burritt, says a foreign letter writer, has taken a deeper hold on the affections of the English people than any other American who ever visited that country.

If Congress had passed the ten regiment bill as promptly as it was recommended, Gen. Taylor that with which he held his advanced position.

The widow of the late Mormon Prophet, Joe Smith, has returned to the city of Nauvoo, (Ill.) and has taken the hotel known as the Mauson House.

The house in which Charlotte Temple died, on the corner of Pell street and the Bowery, New York, is now a low grocery, where small black-legs 'traile for poultry.'

A new town in the Western part of the State taken from Tyriffham, has been incorporated by the name of Monterey.

There is to be a great sale of land, in the new city of Lawrence, the last of this month. Contracts are taken there, to put up houses, complete, in fifteen days!

The Astor House in New York City, has been illuminated with ten thousand and fifty-four lights and four transparencies, in honor of Gen. Taylor's victories.

Since the commencement of the war, Philadelphia has raised for the army and navy 2613 men, more than any other city in the Union.

The steamers Oregon and Knickerbocker recently came in contact just after passing through Hell Gate, and the latter was somewhat damaged. The passengers of the Knickerbocker have published a card in the Boston papers in which the accident is attributed to those having charge of the Oregon. These boats connect with railroads Boston and New York.

Maj. Gen. Zachary Taylor, states the New York Sun, is a democrat, instead of a whig; and his brother is one of the oldest Democratic Republicans in Kentucky. The General joined the army in the last war with England.

Gen. Taylor has written a letter of condolence to Hon. Henry Clay, in which he speaks in the most enthusiastic terms of his lamented son, Col. Clay, both as an officer and a man.

F. A. Durivage, favorably known as one of the ablest and most popular journalists of the day, and who has been for some time engaged in conducting the Boston Weekly Synbol, has retired from the editorial chair of that paper. In his future relations, may abundant success attend him.

The Mayor of Philadelphia, has issued a proclamation recommending an illumination of the city on the 19th inst. in honor of the capture of Vera Cruz.

Benjamin Shurtleff, M. D. died in Boston, on the 12th inst. aged seventy-two years and five months. At the time of his decease he was the oldest physician in the County of Suffolk and the oldest Honorary Graduate of Harvard University.

Advices from the River of Plate render it probable that a war will soon be entered upon between Rosas, the President of Buenos Ayres, and the empire of Brazil.

The public are invited to attend.

VICIOUS EXCESSES.

My attention has recently been called to the subject of secret vice, by noticing, in one of the papers, the death of Monroe Edwards, who died lately at the Sing Sing State Prison, New York, of consumption brought on by indulgence in solitary habits. The community are not aware to how great an extent this degrading vice is practised. By the reports from the Worcester Insane Hospital, it will be learned that a large proportion of the cases brought to that institution are traced solely to this cause. Does it not become philanthropists to look into and cause such vices to be put into the hands of our youth as will inform them on this subject, without corrupting their minds. Such a work is published by Messrs. Otis, Broaders & Co. of Boston, of which some 30,000 copies have been sold. This work, entitled "Manhood. Causes of its Premature Decline," etc., is translated from the French of Deslandes, and has been highly recommended by Dr. Woodward of Worcester; Doane of New York; Winslow Lewis, Jr., of Boston, and other eminent physicians. We do not hesitate to say, that aside from humanity, directors of our public institutions would in a pennyworth of view find it to their advantage to put one of these books into the hands of every inmate of their establishments; for what ever contributes to the health of those under their charge, enables them to derive a greater amount of receipts for their labor—while, on the other hand, the poor ignorant person, addicted to the vice, unaware of what is the cause of his emaciation and weakness, is daily becoming not only a burden to himself, but an expense to those who are to provide for him.

MANHOOD.

CAUSES of its Premature Decline, with directions for its Perfect Restoration. Addressed to those suffering from the destructive effects of Excessive Indulgence, Solitary Habits, etc., etc. By L. Deslandes, M. D. Translated from the French, with many additions; By an American Physician. Twenty-seventh edition. 252 pp. 15 mo.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

Physicians of extensive observations, and superintendents of establishments for the moral management of Lunatics, concur in assuring us that the canker-worm of death is gnawing at the vitals of many youths of all ages, in all countries, as portrayed by the author. If it were once freely circulated, the tendency would be beneficial, because like an alarm gun, it would give warning in season to avert threatened danger. It might thus drive away a fiend that would ruin soul and body at the same time and blight the dawn of life before the individual is conscious of his duty to himself, to society, or to his Maker—Boston Medical and Surgical Journal.

I consider Deslandes' book, as decidedly the best treatise extant in the French or English Language. The subject is extremely important, and one too much overlooked by our profession generally, and the evils of the vice on which your publication treats are not appreciated by the community, although the cases presented in your book are frightful. Yet judging from many patients who have been under treatment they have not been overdrawn.—A. Sidney Doane, M. D. New York.

The work of Deslandes, by pointing out the diseases resulting from excessive indulgence, which are manifest in every insane asylum, no less than in the shattered constitution of those indulging, will do much to prevent the vice, which by its prevalence among the young has so much influence on the present as on the future well being of the many.—Winslow Lewis, Jr., M. D., Boston.

The vice is doubtless very much more common in this country than is generally supposed, or than most medical men are ready to believe; and it is a frightful source of ill health and fatal disease with the young. I have no doubt; I hope therefore it will go into extensive circulation. The views of the writer are excellent on this subject.—Dr. S. B. Woodward, Superintendent of the Insane Hospital at Worcester.

The present work abounds in well authenticated cases going fully to substantiate the position taken by the author, and cannot be read without producing a deep conviction that something ought to be done to check this deplorable evil.—Zion's Herald.

The volume as now published will prove eminently useful, and deserving the consideration of all to whom is committed the responsible trust of moral and physical education.—John W. Francis, M. D., New York.

We recommend the work, entitled Manhood, etc., to the careful perusal of persons of all classes. The moral as well as the physical advantages sure to result from such perusal will be most readily recognized and felt by those who stand most in need of the work.—Pharmaz Journal.

We do not think we go too far in saying that society is deeply indebted to the author for producing so useful, so much wanted, so valuable, and so truly moral a book.—Conservative Journal.

The work entitled Manhood, is one of the few books now coming before the public on such a subject which can lay claim to the character of being strictly professional, at the same time that it is fully intelligible to all who read it. The moral and medical progress given in it render it invaluable.—Medical.

"I consider Deslandes' book, as decidedly the best treatise extant in the French or English language. The subject is extremely important, and one too much overlooked by our profession generally, and the evils of the vice, on which your publication treats are not appreciated by the community, although the cases presented in your book are frightful. Yet judging from many patients who have been treated, the disease has not been overdrawn."—A. Sidney Dowe, M. D. New York.

"The work of Deslandes, by pointing out the diseases resulting from excess, the evils of which are manifest in every insane asylum, no less than in the shattered constitution of those indulging, will do much to prevent the vice, which by its prevalence among the young has so much influence on the present and on the future well-being of the many."—Wendell Lewis, Jr., M. D., Boston.

"The vice is doubtless very much more common in this country than is generally supposed, or than most medical men are ready to believe; and it is a frightful source of all health and fatal diseases with the young. I have no doubt, I hope therefore it will go into extensive circulation. The views of the writer are superintending on this subject."—Jr. S. B. Woodward, Superintendent of the Insane Hospital at Worcester.

"The present work abounds in well authenticated cases going fully to substantiate the position taken by the author, and cannot be read without producing a deep conviction that something ought to be done to check this deplorable evil."—Zion's Herald.

"The volume as now published will prove eminently useful, and deserving the consideration of all to whom is committed the responsible trust of moral and physical education."—John W. Francis, M. D., New York.

"We recommend the work, entitled Manhood, etc., to the careful perusal of persons of all classes. This moral as well as the physical advantages sure to result from such perusal will be most readily recognized and felt by those who stand most in need of them."—Pharmaz Journal.

"We do not think we go too far in saying that society is deeply indebted to the author for producing so useful, so much wanted, so valuable, and so truly moral a book."—Conservative Journal.

"The work entitled Manhood, is one of the few books now coming before the public on such a subject which can lay claim to the character of being strictly professional, at the same time that it is fully intelligible to all who read it. The moral and medical principles given in it render it invaluable."—Magazine.

THE ORIGINAL AND GENUINE

ONE PRICE STORE.

GEO. W. WARREN & CO.

INVITE the attention of the public to the FINEST

DISPLAY of

Foreign and Domestic Goods ever made upon their counters. On account of the large times and great scarcity abroad, goods have very low, and we are offering SHAWLS, SILKS,

DRESS GOODS, and other foreign fabrics, much lower than ever before.

Having more than doubled

the amount of our business since the first year we opened this establishment, we are enabled to offer increased advantages to all purchasers of Dry Goods, at

WHOLESALE OR RETAIL.

Being desirous not only to keep all the customers

we have, but to make as many more, we shall use

WE WILL ALL WHO CALL UPON US. It is a common thing to advertise to sell lower than every one else; we only wish customers to examine for themselves. We have but one price, but that we know our own interest well enough to make as low, if not a little lower, than can be found under any circumstances, at other places.

Purchasers will find at this establishment not only the Richest and best Goods Imported,

But also a full and complete assortment of MEDIUM and LOW PRICED FABRICS.

OUR STOCK OF

Long and Square Shawls

IS THE LARGEST IN NEW ENGLAND, probably the largest in the United States, and we have not a dozen Cashmere Shawls in our Store, which were not imported by ourselves, which enables us to sell much lower than those who buy on this side. Almost all retailers advertise that they import these Goods, but it is not true; there is not another on the street who does so.

IN RICH DRESS SILKS,

And the best kinds of Black Silks,

WE HAVE EVERY THING THAT IS

NEW, CHOICE, OR DESIRABLE.

The value of our SHAWLS and SILKS alone, is more than $100,000!

At the present time, and the variety is too great for us to say more than that the purchaser of a cheap, a comfortable, or a Rich Shawl or silk, can hardly fail to find something adapted to their taste in our immense assortment.

In Ladies' Dress Goods

we commence at a fine LONDON PRINT at Nine-pence, and go up through all the varieties of Gingham,

French Prints, Lawns, Muslins, Jaconets, Brilliants, Grenadines, Mous de Laines, and Mohair

and Tussore Plaids, etc. etc. to the richest SILK

MUSLINS, BARELS and CASHMERE imported.

In our White Department will be found a full assortment of LINEN FABRICS, of every kind, from the Hdkf. to nainsook, to the best goods in SHEETINGS, Shirts, Damasks, etc.

EMBROIDERIES, LACES, &c.

BLEACHED AND BROWN DOMESTICS.

All the different kinds of CAMBRICS, M. uslins, etc.

Housekeeping Articles,

OF EVERY DESCRIPTION, A FULL ASSORTMENT.

HOSIERY, GLOVES, FANCY ARTICLES, &c.

OUR DEPARTMENT

For Mourning Goods, will be found full and complete at all seasons of the year, and great care is used to obtain durable fabrics.

Woolen Goods.

BROADCLOTHS, CASSIMERES, DOESKINS,

ERMINETS, DRILLS, and many other fabrics for Boys' Wear.

In fact the most complete stock of DRY GOODS which has EVER YET been exhibited in one ESTABlishment, and Merchants, as well as purchasers at retail, will do well to examine our stock before they make their selections.

POETRY.

For the Quincy Patriot.
TO-MORROW.

To the heart that can hope tho' surcharged with sorrow,
Futurity pictures relief from its pain;
But dismal to him are the thoughts of to-morrow
Whose hopes in to-morrow have long been in vain.

The wretch to whom day after day brings but sorrow,
And adds to his misery, already too great,
With terror expects that the coming to-morrow
Will bring some new grief to increase his hard fate.

And if, from the chances of life, he would borrow
The hope that some fortune some good will impart,
That hope, as it fades from his view on the morrow,
Adds gall to the canker that preys on his heart.

In vain may you urge him to trust in to-morrow
Whose wife and whose children are suffering for bread,
Or seek to plant hope in that bosom of sorrow
By telling him "verily, thou shalt be fed."

To history he'll turn, where the pages of sorrow
That many have famish'd too plainly reveals;
It may be the fate of his children to-morrow,
With frantic distraction his breaking heart feels.

In death he would seek a relief from his sorrow,
But who for his wife or his children would care?
Ah! who would watch o'er them, his sweet ones, to-morrow,
If I should resign thee to grief and despair?

Say, would you preserve some poor mortal from sorrow,
And save his young lov'd ones from misery and woe?
Go—go to his novel to day, not to-morrow,
And from your abundance a portion bestow.

In vain may you hope that assurance he'll borrow
From him who to the "widow and orphan will save";
Hope flies from his bosom, despair on the morrow
May seize the poor victim and bear to the grave.

F. M. ARLINGTON, Weymouth.

For the Quincy Patriot.

THE FLIRT—A Song.

A translation from the French.
Long time have I travelled the earth,
In all parts they've seen me a ringer;
Courtship blonde and brunette full o' mirth,
Loving, nay sighing for danger.

Now, with the French ladies gay,
Now, with the English romantic;
In every part where I did stay
On all sides the mighty Atlantic,
As the country, so also was I.

In faith, my pride long ago perished;
From love to love I did run;
My heart ne'er but one lady cherished,
And I loved her too long and true.

Now with the French ladies gay,
The gay butterfly well I have aped,
And like it, have loved to flit round;
Constant love I have always escaped,
My true pleasure in changing was found.

Now with the French ladies, etc.
In following the dearest trace
Of the sex which was made to be lov'd,
In Germany, Italy, and every place,
I have pleased and charmed as I lov'd.

Now with the French ladies gay, etc.

LINES WRITTEN IN AN ALBUM.

BY J. Q. ADAMS.

One day, between the Lip and Heart
A wordless strife arose,
Which was expert in the art
His purpose to disclose.

The Lip called forth his vassal Tongue,
And made him vouch—a lie!
The slave his servile anthem sung,
And brav'd the listening eys.

The Heart, to speak, in vain essay'd,
Nor could his purpose reach—
His will nor voice nor tongue obeyed;
His silence was his speech.

Mark thou their difference, child of Earth;
While each performs his part!
Not all the Lip can speak its worth
The silence of the Heart!

ANECDOTES.

"I saw, Jack," shouted a drover the other day, to his pal, "these cursed sheep won't move in this weather; lend us a bark of your dog, will you?"

"Sam, how do you like the knife that I traded to you last week?" "So, so; it is not very sharp, yet you shaved me with it."

A negro being asked how late it was by his watch, replied, "Sixty-three minutes past half after twelve; why you no keep a watch youself?"

A country apothecary being out for a day's shooting took his errand boy to carry his game bag. Entering a field of turnips, the dog pointed, and the boy, overjoyed at the prospect of his master's success, exclaimed, "Lor, master, there's a covey; if you can get near 'em won't you please 'em?" "Physic them! you young rascal, what do you mean?" said the doctor. "Why, kill 'em to be sure," replied the lad.

"Va's de matter, va's de matter?" exclaimed an old Dutchman in New York, as he tucked up his apron and ran out of his shop to know the meaning of a crowd in his neighborhood. "Va's de matter?" "There's a man killed," replied a bystander. "Oh, ish dat all?" said our friend evidently disappointed: "ish dat all? shoot a man killed! humph, I tho't it was a fight."

Young physicians find it hard to get into business but they will succeed, after all, if they can only have patience.

MISCELLANY.

REVENGE.

'Don't be in such a hurry, Nell; you have granted me but five minutes of your precious society this evening, and I have not said half I wished to.'

'We shall be missed, Harry!' answered a low, very sweet voice, 'you know how abruptly we left the saloon, and I am sure Kate half suspected my intention to join you here, when I asked her to take my place at the Harp a moment. Another time, but not now.'

The speaker placed her hand upon the arm of her companion, as if to urge him forward but he resisted.

'Too bad, Nell!' he answered 'promise me then, after your guests have left, to return here, and give me a decided reply to the question I asked you not long ago, will you Nell?'

The two had emerged from the shadow of the elm tree where they stood, and the full moonlight revealed them distinctly. One was a tall, noble looking young man, with jetty, eloquent eyes, and hair of the same dark hue; his companion a fair, graceful girl of nineteen summers; arrayed as if for some festive, in a dress of fleecy muslin, a scarf flung lightly over her head; its pure folds mingling with the long auburn curls that lay in glittering masses over his shoulders. At the last question of her companion, she looked up, and smiled; the smile, with a glowing blush, was her only answer; but Harry Morton perfectly understood it, and his fingers closed softly about the small hand yet resting on his arm, as he whispered, 'thank you, dear Eleanor! now I shall feel much happier the remainder of this evening.'

They turned into a velvet lawn leading up to a large, stately looking mansion from the casement of which brilliant lights were streaming over the shrubbery and gushes of music floating sweetly out upon the fragrant air, when Eleanor Clifford started slightly and lifting her fan, pointed towards the piazza.

'See!' she said in a low whisper, 'there is my cousin now!'

'Kate?' repeated Harry, 'so it is! looking doubtless for you.' While he spoke, a gaily dressed female came gliding down the hall, and as she paused at the open door, the light from the inner apartment streamed brilliantly around her, and revealed her form with perfect distinctness. She was tall, and faultlessly graceful, and as she stood motionless a few seconds, her head bent in an attitude of anxious attention, and holding in one small hand the flowery folds of her azure robes; with more than queenly grace, Harry added, half aloud, 'Kate is looking beautiful to-night.'

Eleanor lifted her sweet face suddenly to that of her lover, he met her gaze, and smiled, though a flash stole over his bold forehead in the moonlight.

'Well! well!' said she playfully, 'I won't be jealous, Harry; if those black eyes of hers did once have power to charm you I cannot fear them now,' and she ran lightly up the piazza steps with a happy careless laugh.

'Traunts!' exclaimed Kate Malcom; and turning suddenly round towards the light, she discovered a brilliantly beautiful face, but there was a strange glitter in the large dark eyes, and a singularly expressive smile parted her red, full lips.

'I say, Nell!' she added, 'did you know it is nearly an hour since you quitted the saloon? but beneath such sweet moonlight as this, and with a pleasant companion one doubtless forgets how fast time flies. Never mind, I won't detain you with a lecture now, you are wanted in the saloon so go along,' and falling back to the side of Harry Morton, she put one jewelled hand negligently on his arm, while Eleanor hurriedly disengaging her scarf from her long ringlets, and with a glowing blush on her cheek, glided past them into the brilliantly lighted rooms.

Late that same evening, Kate Malcom ascended the long oaken staircase in Clifford Hall, and entering the chamber allotted to herself and cousin, gazed long and eagerly about it.

'She is not here,' she murmured, at last, setting down the elegant night lamp she carried upon the toilet, then snatching up a dark mantle from the couch, she wrapped it hurriedly around her, and descended the stairs again. Leaving the garden shrubbery, she turned into the elm tree avenue, keeping in its shade until she reached a gate opening on the lawn. Then she paused for voices came to her ears, and she crouched suddenly down behind a large elm, just in time to avoid being seen by Harry Morton and her cousin, who were walking slowly towards the house arm in arm. The former was speaking in a voice low, but full of tenderness, 'Keep it, dearest Nell! until the promise made to me to-night shall be fulfilled, or perhaps you weary of that promise, and seek to be released, it shall be a token, either of your continued affection, or bear to me the tidings when that affection shall change, do you understand?'

'Harry!' exclaimed Eleanor reproachfully, 'you know that can never be.' Then holding up one beautiful finger on which glittered a plain gold ring, she added playfully, 'yes! when my affection shall change, and I seek to be released from the promises made to-night, this shall assuredly be my token.'

The heart of Harry Morton thrilled beneath the eloquent gaze lifted to his face, and taking the little hand in his own, he drew it fondly to his lips.

'Thank Heaven, my sweet Nell!' he murmured, 'that hour is too far distant for me now to fear it.'

'Perhaps not so far as you may imagine,' was the muttered exclamation of Kate Malcom. She had seen the movement of Eleanor, and caught the flash of gold upon her finger in the moonlight, a bitter feeling swelled her heart, a feeling that brought burning tears to her eyes. Starting suddenly from her concealment, she plunged into the garden shrubbery, all wet and heavy with dew, and retracing her steps towards the house, reached her chamber exhausted and breathless.

'I might as well give up all hope, after this,' she murmured, leaning her cheek against the dark velvet cushion of the chair into which she had sunk, and clasping her hands feebly together, while bitter tears fell fast from her eyes, 'oh! why did I ever cherish the fancy, if fancy it was, that he once loved me? and now! now! it would be bliss to die.' She paused, then, suddenly starting to her feet, with folded arms, and compressed lips, began rapidly to pace the floor. Gradually a glow stole over her cheek, before white as monumental marble, and deepened there to crimson, while the large dark eyes, bent fixedly upon the floor, became darker, and intensely brilliant, until fire seemed to break in every flash, through their long and drooping fringes.

'It is all that is left me!' she murmured pausing in her hurried tread, and lifting her beautiful face, that glowed with fierce and contending emotions, 'it is all I can do now! and the time will come, when I shall be revenged.'

A light approaching step startled the excited girl, and springing towards the bed, she flung herself upon it and pulled the curtains hastily down just as Eleanor entered the apartment. She paused, her bright face glowing with smiles and dimples, glanced anxiously around the room, and then stealing towards the couch, drew back with her small hand on which glittered the circlet of gold, its falling drapery. Her cousin lay there but apparently wrapped in a repose so motionless and calm, Eleanor refrained from breaking it, bending over her, until her own glossy ringlets fell in glittering masses on the dark braids of the sleeper, she pressed her damask lips softly to the flushed cheek and silently withdrew again.

The proud heart of Kate Malcom swelled, as she felt that gentle kiss, but she resolutely forced back the tears that gushed beneath her closed lids, and with a stern effort crushed the softer feeling that threatened to overcome her. She was resolved! her pride had been deeply wounded, her affections not only lightly flung aside, but crushed, and every better sentiment in her heart, smothered by one fierce feeling alone, one strong desire of revenge.

CHAPTER II.

Harry Morton left his early home and all there he held most dear for foreign lands, with a bright hope in time to win the wreath of deathless fame, and then return and lay his laurels at sweet Eleanor Clifford's feet.

'Nell, my love,' said Mrs. Clifford, as she laid her hand caressingly upon the head of her beautiful and only child, 'did not Harry fear to trust your little wilful heart out of his keeping for so long a time as two or three years?'

'Oh no! mamma,' was the playful reply, as Eleanor held up one small hand and displayed a plain gold ring, 'he gave me a talisman you see, to guard me; as this is bound upon my finger, so it is upon my heart.'

At that moment, Kate Malcom, who was seated at her embroidery frame, started from her chair, and quitting the room with a slightly scornful smile curling her beautiful lips.

Eleanor caught the disturbed expression of her face, and with an eloquent glance towards her mother, followed her from the room. She found Kate wandering through the park, near the spot of her last moon-light walk with Harry Morton, the place brought back sweet by-gone memories to the bosom of one maiden, but roused bitter feelings in the heart of the other, feelings that gave her cheek its pallid hue and her eye its languid glance.

As Eleanor passed one fair arm gently around her cousin's graceful waist, Kate suddenly paused and made a movement as if to fling aside that slight embrace, then the emotion passed, and with a half averted face she again moved forward. They proceeded in silence some distance along the park, when Eleanor, who had been playfully gathering in her fingers the blossoms of the rose-trees that skirted their path, stopped abruptly and exclaimed, 'I have lost my ring!'

Kate also paused, and bent to aid in the search. 'How came you to drop it, Nell?' she asked with evident concern, as pressing aside the drooping rose tree, she peered beneath their shade.

'I caught it in these bushes, and slipped it from my finger,' returned Eleanor, in a slightly trembling voice, 'I fear it is lost! I shall never find it, this grass is so thick and long.' Kate made no answer, but her head was bent so low, the dark heavy hair entirely veiled her face and prevented her cousin from noticing the strange whiteness of her cheek.

'I must give it up,' added Eleanor sadly, 'don't look any longer, Kate, it is useless.' Her eyes filled with tears as she spoke, and with another anxious lingering look, she turned from her cousin towards the house. When she had quite disappeared, Kate again lifted the drooping rose-bushes, and again searched carefully beneath them. Just as she too was about to give up the search as hopeless, her eye caught the glitter of the lost ring, suspended from a twig upon which it had caught in falling. At the sight, she started, some violent emotion sent the warm blood suddenly to her cheek, and the next moment left her marble pale. With a quick glance around, she drew the ring from the shrub that held it, and clasping it nervously in her hand, seemed striving to subdue the strange sensation stirring her whole frame.

'It shall be done,' she exclaimed at last, 'away this weakness, now and forever! Harry Morton! you too shall drain the bitter cup of which I have drank, though in holding it to your lips, I trample on my cousin's heart!'

An expression of fierce hate, as she spoke swept over her beautiful face, and when it passed, left a cold dark shadow resting there. Alas, bitter feelings had sprung up in the soul of that young girl, dimming with their poisonous breath, the light of every thing pure and good within her.

CHAPTER III.

Harry Morton was sitting alone in a dreary looking apartment in London. An open sheet lay before him;—but it contained no writing,—nothing save a small, plain ring of gold; with Eleanor Clifford's name engraved on the inside. The ring! it had come; a voiceless, but eloquent token to him in his wanderings, and he had sat a long, long time gazing motionless upon it, the very foundations of his heart breaking up, and his strong soul bowed with a sense of anguish too terrible for expression.

It had come unaccompanied by a word; or the slightest explanation; but he understood it; only too well. From the crushing weight of sorrow, regret and bitter disappointment, that had at first almost unmanned him, Harry recovered himself slowly, and pushing the letter and ring from him with a slight shudder, he left his seat near the table. Going towards a secret drawer in his cabinet he unlocked it, and drew from the paper that enveloped it, a glossy ringlet of auburn hair. At the sight of that bright token, given him by one he once tenderly loved, a mist came over his eyes and his pallid lips quivered, as suspending the curl between his fingers, he turned again towards the table.

'As she has done so will I!' he muttered, then drawing the sheet toward him, he enclosed the tress of hair, traced a few lines beneath, folded and directed it to Eleanor Clifford. The words written were few and cold: 'You will never see me again!'

Flinging himself back in his chair, he covered his face with both hands and remained, for a long time, motionless as marble; occasional heavy sighs alone giving evidence that life yet animated that statue-like form. When he again uncovered his face, save a painful expression of subdued agony in the eyes, it was calm.

'Henceforth!' he murmured, rising and walking the floor with a faltering, feeble step, 'I am a wanderer and an exile from my native land! I will never return to meet one who has so coldly and unfeelingly crushed every hope that made life bright and pleasant to me. Buried be my name and memory in oblivion forever!'

CHAPTER IV.

Eleanor Clifford was seated alone in her dressing room, gazing thoughtfully from the large open casement; and there was a troubled expression in her soft eyes; while a slight contraction of the fair, sweet forehead, betrayed some unpleasant feeling stirring in her bosom. It was many weeks since she had heard from Harry and in spite of herself, she felt deeply depressed. Daily, nay, hourly, had she watched and waited for the expected letter, but it came not, and she had almost yielded to despair. Oh! the bitterness of such despair as hers! the sickening suspense, the 'hoping against hope.' She felt it was pressing coldly on her heart, heavier and heavier day by day; until she almost wished the burdened strings might break.

For a long time she had been sitting alone near the casement, when Kate Malcom entered the chamber, and carelessly tossed a folded letter towards her. Eleanor sprang to catch it, for she knew the seal, and in the wild happiness of the moment did not observe the strange manner of her cousin. She clasped the precious letter to her bosom; her languid eyes kindling with delight, until they flashed like diamonds from under their lifted lashes; and her pale cheek deepening to a soft, glowing rose; then she tremblingly broke the seal. A curl of hair fell to the floor;—a long brown tress, she knew it well, and her surprised glance next rested upon the few words traced beneath.

'Oh! never was there a change so saddening as that which passed over the countenance of that poor girl,—the expression of radiant happiness faded from her eyes, as they dwelt in a wild stare upon that fatal letter, while her cheek and small sweet lips paled to alabaster. She gazed but a moment—a moment fraught with years of agony, and then as she fully comprehended the meaning of that cold, brief message, with a suffocating gasp and then murmured the name of 'Harry!' she fell forward senseless upon the floor.

When Mrs. Clifford sought her daughter an hour after, she found her extended lifeless, to all appearance, upon the floor, one hand still grasping the open letter, and her white cheek resting on a dishevelled curl of auburn hair. She was removed to her couch, assistance summoned and restoratives applied, before any signs of returning life were manifested. Opening her eyes at last, with a wild gaze upon her mother who stood near, her first effort was to spring from her pillow; as Mrs. Clifford caught and restrained her, she struggled fiercely for release, the name of 'Harry!' rang wildly from her lips, and she sank back again upon the couch, with blood gushing from her mouth and nostrils.

CHAPTER V.

It was night,—silence and darkness shrouded Clifford Hall. There was a night lamp burning in one still room, and its shaded light fell softly over a couch, upon which the motionless form of Eleanor Clifford. Not a breath, not a movement disturbed the snowy folds that shrouded her, and no warm pulse stirred the muslin resting lightly over her bosom. Her repose was calm and statue like, it was the repose of death.

Kneeling near the couch, her hands clasped strongly together, her face white and rigid as marble, and her large glittering eyes distended until they seemed starting from their sockets, was Kate Malcom. She was alone with the dead, alone with one whose young heart her hand had crushed and now was reaping the bitter fruits of her fierce revenge.

'Oh, Nell! my cousin!' she murmured, rising suddenly from her knees; 'would that my heart too might break! that I might be as low and still as you are lying now; turning away she paced the floor, wringing her hands and sobbing convulsively, while broken murmurs came wildly from her lips. 'I killed her! I sent that ring; and now I am revenged! Revenge! oh, it is terrible, terrible! it is crushing my heart, as if with a burning iron, and it will not break. Oh Nell! dear wronged Nell; and this this is revenge!' The wretched girl knelt again near the couch of death and wind- ing her arms about the quiet form reposing there, all unheeding her agonized appeals, she prayed to die, prayed wildly and earnestly, until exhausted by contending emotions she sank to the floor, almost as inanimate as the breathless slumberer above her.

When morning dawned, they found her lying there still, but raving in all the wildness of delirium. She had disengaged the motionless hand of Eleanor, from the snowy folds in which it rested, and held the cold dimpled fingers in a grasp so close, it seemed almost impossible again to unloose them.

A long, lingering illness followed, and as Mrs. Clifford watched unwearyingly over that sick bed, and listened to the fierce wanderings of her agonized mind, she little dreamed of the dread secret, which even in her wildest ravings was locked closely in her soul.

Kate Malcom recovered, but her future life was a melancholy one; around every thing was flung a gloomy pall, that pressed heavily on her soul. She had indeed, in holding the bitter cup to Harry Morton's lips, trampled on her cousin's heart. She did not reveal the cause of Harry's supposed faithlessness, of her own instrumentality in the death of the innocent Eleanor, until the stern upbraidings of conscience, and her keen self reproach, became too poignant longer to endure.

Two years after, Harry Morton, who had become a saddened, broken hearted man, though still firm in his resolve never to re-visit his native land, received a letter from Kate Malcom, disclosing her crime, and alleging her disappointed affection as the cause, assuring him of Eleanor's innocence, and acquainting him with her early death.

If possible the last stroke was more crushing to Harry's already wounded spirit, than the first, and he mourned over the wronged affections of his lost Eleanor, with a bitterness far exceeding the anguish of his first disappointment.

He felt no sentiment of indignation weighing with his sorrow towards the author of his misery, every other emotion was lost in one overwhelming tide of grief. He immediately set sail for his native land, but before he arrived there, erring Kate Malcom was dead. She had fallen, herself a victim, to the demon passion of Revenge.

NOT SO BAD.

During the opposition between two steamboat lines, running from the Kennebec to Boston, and just as the river boats were making ready to start, a wagon hove in sight in which was an old lady, with an accompaniment of band-boxes and bundles, evidently equipped for a journey. The respective agents of the two lines sprang towards her. 'Take the Marshall, ma'am?—fine boat.' 'Try the Penobscot, new boat, built last summer, commanded by the favorite of every body—Capt.——', etc. etc. The boys and loafers around echoed the claims of their favorites in concert, 'Hurrah for the Penobscot, to the John Marshall.' The old lady who had probably never seen a steamboat before, whose chief notion of the varnishes was their boiler bursting propensities, was almost beside herself with terror, at the hubbub.

'O, Lordy! I wish I'd never started a step. If I'd a known there was to be such an awful time in this I'm sure I wouldn't. The pesky bilers—I know they'll burst—every body's looking after me and nobody's attending to 'em. There go right away, all of you, I'm going straight back. I couldn't rest a wink for fear of the pesky bilers.'

'You need give yourself no anxiety on account of the bilers in the Marshall'—(said the agent), 'they are new and sound, and couldn't be made to burst.'

'Are you sure of it,' said the old lady, evincing symptoms of a favorable disposition towards the Marshall—'you ain't a tryin' to practice on the credulity of a poor lone woman I hope.'

'No fear of me—sound as a tea-kettle,' was the reply.

The old woman was about descending from a wagon to embark in the Marshall, when the other agent stepped up.

'Madam,' said he, in a serious tone, 'No doubt the Marshall's bilers are sound enough, but the best bilers are dangerous things. We knew that a great many people had been killed by them—especially of late—and took the bilers out of our boat three weeks ago.'

'You did,' said she 'that's the boat for me then—James (to the wagon boy) pass out the bonnet box, and the umbrella, and the parasol—and don't forget the new shoes and doughnuts under the seat. Tell Sally I went in the boat without any bilers, and she need have no fears of me.'

And giving her arm to the agent she hurried aboard the Penobscot—re-marking that they had better hurry out of the way of the bilers of the other boat, as if they were to bust she might get hurt at that distance.

STUFF TAKING. It is curious to see the various modes in which people take snuff. Some do it by little fits and starts, and get over the thing quickly. These are epi-grammatic snuff takers, who come to the point as fast as possible, and to whom the pungency is every thing. They generally use a sharp and severe snuff—a sort of essence of sin's points. Others are urbanity and polished demeanor; they value the style as much as the sensation, and offer the box around them as much out of dignity as benevolence. Some take snuff irritably, others bashfully, others in a manner as dry as the snuff itself, generally with an economy of the vegetable; others with luxuriance of gesture, and a lavishness of supply, that announces a moister article and sheds its superfluous honors over neckcloth and coat. Dr. Johnson was probably a snuff taker of this kind. He used to take it out of his waistcoat-pocket, instead of a box. There is a species of long-armed snuff taker, that performs the operation in a style of potent and elaborate preparation, ending with a sudden activity. But smaller and rounder men sometimes attempt it. He first puts his head on one side; then stretches forth the arm, with a pinch in hand; then brings round his hand as a snuff-taking elephant might his trunk; and finally, shakes snuff, head and nose together, in a sudden vehemence of convulsions. His eye-brows all the while are lifted up, as if to make more room for the onset; and when he has ended, he draws himself back to his perpendicular; and generally proclaims the victory he has won over the insipidity of the previous moment, by a snuff and a great 'Hah!'

STUFFING FOR A GOOSE. A Scotchman and his wife, two relics of the old school, says an Irish paper, recently bethought themselves, for the first time since their marriage, that they would have a goose for dinner. The wife with no small degree of consequence, went to the market and purchased one; and on her return home she said to her husband, 'Now, Billy, my lad, wat is it to be stuf't we?' 'Owt ate green, Sally, my lass,' replied the delighted husband, who marched off to his work, in expectation of returning at noon to a glorious dinner. The dinner hour arrived, and off Billy started, snuffing his nose as he trudged along, fancying he smelt the stuffing. Grace having been said, Billy commenced carving the goose and Sally held her plate for a leg. 'Stop a bit, my lass,' said Billy, 'wot's this here?' pulling a quantity of green worsted from the inside with his fork. 'Why, stuffin', to be sure; didna tha sa it wot to be stuf't we owt at wor green? and we'd nowt else it house at wor green but that.'

GRAFTED TREES. Look over your fruit trees, which were grafted in the spring, or budded in the summer, and suffer no shoots from the stocks to remain; lest they rob

MEXICAN AFFAIRS. The Salem (Mass.) Gazette states that from Vera Cruz to the city of Mexico, whither our army under General Scott is doubtless already marching, is two hundred and eighty or two hundred and ninety miles, viz: The National Bridge, towards which General Twig is to move, is a strongly fortified place on the road to Jalapa, the capital of the State of Vera Cruz. It is a stupendous work of solid masonry thrown over a wild and steep ravine. Jalapa is in a delightful situation, four thousand feet above the sea, and about ninety miles from Vera Cruz. It is noted for producing the medical article, jalap. Thirty-five miles further in towards the capital of Mexico, and on the road to it, is situated the strong castle of Perote, one of the chief fortresses of Mexico; La Puebla is another fortified place, two hundred and twelve miles from Vera Cruz.

SINGULAR EVENTS. The Plymouth Rock mentions that Rev. Daniel Thomas died Jan. 15th, aged sixty nine years, and that Miss Mehitabel Torrey died May 10th, aged sixty-one years. They both resided in Abington in this State. Thirty seven years since Mr. Thomas and Miss Torrey were engaged to be married, and had made the customary preparations for that purpose, and had procured a house, when she was taken sick and has remained in an almost helpless condition since that period, confined to her room and the principal portion of the time to her bed. Mr. Thomas resided in the same family with her for thirty-four years, aiding her relatives in alleviating her sufferings, and at the time of his death bequeathed to her his property. Miss Torrey in her early youth was of a feeble constitution, and at the time of her death she was so emaciated that her whole weight was but about forty pounds.

BATTLE OF BUENA VISTA. Maj. Gen. Taylor's detailed report of the battle of Buena Vista has been published. There were eighty companies engaged, containing four thousand and seventy-three non-commissioned officers, musicians, artificers and privates. Gen. Santa Anna, in his official accounts of this battle, states that the Mexican force consisted of 13,432 infantry, divided into 28 battalions; 4,338 cavalry, in 39 squadrons; and a train of artillery of three 24-pounders, three 16-pounders, five 12-pounders, five 8-pounders, and a 7-inch howitzer, all served by 413 artillerymen; the total being 18,184 men. The loss in killed and wounded exceeded fifteen hundred.

ANOTHER CALL. The President will call immediately for six thousand more volunteers, to strengthen the armies in Santa Fe, on the Rio Grande and at Vera Cruz. A rigorous prosecution of the war is the order of the day.

He was a peaceful and industrious citizen, esteemed by all who knew him, and his sudden death deeply lamented. MANHOOD.

CAUSES of its Premature Decline, with directions for its Perfect Restoration. Addressed to those suffering from the destructive effects of Excessive Indulgence, Solitary Habits, etc. etc. By L. Deslandes, M.D. Translated from the French, with many additions, by an American Physician. Twenty-seventh edition. 252 pp. 18 mo.

RECOMMENDATIONS.

Physicians of extensive observations, and superintendents of establishments for the moral management of Lunatics, concur in assuring us that the cancer-worm of death is gnawing at the vitals of many youths of all ages, in all countries too, as portrayed by the author. If it were once freely circulated, the tendency would be beneficial, because like an alarm gun, it would give warning in season to avert threatened danger. It might thus drive away a fiend that would ruin soul and body at the same time and blight the dawn of life before the individual is conscious of his duty to himself, to society, or to his Maker.—Boston Medical and Surgical Journal.

"I consider Deslandes' book, as decidedly the best treatise extant on the French or English Language. The subject is extremely important, and one too much overlooked by our profession generally, and the evils of the vice, on which your publication treats are not appreciated by the community, although the cases presented in your book are frightful. It is a warning to many patients who have been under treatment they have not been overdrawn."—A. Sidney Doane, M.D. New York.

"The work of Deslandes, by pointing out the diseases resulting from excesses, the evils of which are manifest in every insane asylum, no less than in the shattered constitution of those indulging, will do much to prevent the vice, which by its prevalence among the young has so much influence on the present as on the future well being of the many."—Winslow Lewis, Jr., M.D., Boston.

"The vice is doubtless very much more common in this country than is generally supposed, or than most medical men are ready to believe; and it is a frightful source of the health and fatal disease with the young. I have no doubt; I hope to read it will go into extensive circulation. The views of the writer are excellent on this subject."—Dr. S. B. Woodward, Superintendent of the Insane Hospital at Worcester.

"The present work abounds in well authenticated cases going fully to substantiate the position taken by the author, and cannot be read without producing a conviction that something ought to be done to check this deplorable evil."—Zion's Herald.

"The volume as now published will prove eminently useful, and deserving the consideration of all to whom is committed the responsible trust of moral and physical education."—John W. Francis, M.D., New York.

"We recommend the work, entitled Manhood, etc. to the careful perusal of persons of all classes. The moral as well as the physical advantages sure to result from such perusal will be most readily recognized and felt by those who stand most in need of them."—Pharmaz Journal.

"We do not think we go too far in saying that society is deeply indebted to the author for producing so useful, so much wanted, so valuable, and so truly moral a book."—Conservative Journal.

"The work entitled Manhood, is one of the few books now coming before the public on such a subject which can lay claim to the character of being strictly professional, at the same time that it is fully intelligible to all who read it. The moral and medical points given in it are rendered in a plain, forcible, and interesting manner."—Boston Herald.

POETRY.

CHEER YE EACH OTHER.

Cheer ye each other with words
Of mild and of pleasing intent,
To strengthen the loosening chords
Of life with delight and content;
The smile of thy sister recall—
Relieve then thy brother's alloy:
Be loving, and throw over all
Thy sweetest emotions of joy.

Yes, cheer one another along,
In paths ye delight to pursue—
A word to dishearten is wrong,
To those who are striving to do.
A breath is the pinion of thought,
And thought is the breath of the soul,
And spirit by spirit is taught
With good and with evil control.

Speak cheerfully unto the sad,
The wounded in heart and the poor—
A word of affection is glad,
And helpeth the wrong to endure.
Disturb not the hope of thy friend,
If sorrow it maketh to flee,
But keep up the dream to the end—
In joy let its spirit go free.

Deal gently with others that err—
"Thy Mercy that saveth the lost,
And all that thy love may confer
Can never God's bounty exhaust.
Oh! cheer one another along,
And joy and affection impart—
Unkindness of spirit is wrong,
But blessed the cheerful of heart.

Each life is a link in the chain
Of kindred humanity's race,
And sympathy softens the pain,
And helpeth to bear it with grace.
Then cheer one another in gloom,
Since cheerfulness brighteneth care;
'Tis a short narrow road to the tomb—
Oh! cheer one another till there!

LOVE AND LOGIC.

The gods one day sent reason out,
To look for Love, their trusty boy!
They bade her seek him all about,
And lure him home with tempting toy!

She found him in a rosebud reeked,
She begged him to be back in season;
But still the boy the maiden mocked,
For—"Love will never list to reason!"

The Goddess held a jewel up,
With Heaven's own glory flashing thro' it—
"Nay! with my Rose's blushing cup
Said Love,—"Your gem is nothing to it!"

"For shame! false boy! must force be tried?
Is't thus you waste this precious season?"
"Take care! d'ye know this bow," he cried!
Ah! Love too oft has conquered reason!"

"I see you aim!—your rhetoric speeds
On proud Olympus ill without me;
But happy Love no reason needs!
Begone! and when they ask about me,

Just tell them, in my Rose's heart,
I've found so dear, so pure a treasure,
I grudge them not Minerva's art,
Or laughing Hebe's cup of pleasure!"

Theupid had not a word to say,—
She knew the rogue was talking treason;—
But back to Ida bent her way;
For Love can better plead than reason.

THE PRINTER.

A mental lamp hung out by life's way side
Unnoticed; yet his unpretending ray
Shines clearly on man's intellectual way,
And proves to pilgrims an unfailing guide.
He has within a worthy sort of pride,
And knows his worth, though some allow it not:

A heart, a thinking mind, above his lot,
'Mong men are his. His coffers ill supplied;
Yet want and virtue seldom ask in vain;
Nor is his life exempt from various pain:
Few days are his—the rose that freshly bloom'd
On boyhood's cheek, assumes the hue of death;

The oil within him soon consumed,
Ere two score years and ten he yields his fatal breath.

ANECDOTES.

"Hans!" said a Dutchman to his son, whom he had just been thrashing for sweating at his mother, "vay's dat you'r tinkin zo vicked about, in de corner dere?"
"I aint tink nott'n."

"You lie, you tagbone you—you tinks cot tam—and now I'll vip you for dat."

An Irish gentleman, well known in the sporting circles for his wit, was accosted by a friend, with—
"Upon my word, you are riding a good horse!"
"And why should I not ride a good horse?"
"Well," rejoined his friend, "will be jump timber?"
"Timber!" replied the other, "faith he'll jump over your head, man, in a jiffy!"

Some time since a man was heard lamenting the death of two of his sons. "Two stout, hearty boys," said he, "and died just afore hayin'—it enymost onid me?"

"I tell you, Susan, that I will commit suicide, if you won't have me." "Well, John, as soon as you have given me that proof of your affection, I will believe that you love me."

A lady had a custom of saying to a favorite little dog, to make him follow her, "come along, sir." A would-be witty gentleman stepped up to her one day, and accosted her with—
"Is it me, madam, you called?"
"Oh, no, sir," said the lady, with great composure, "it was another puppy I spoke to."

Leigh Hunt was asked by a lady, at a dessert, if he would venture on an orange? "Madam, I should be very happy to do so, but I'm afraid I should tumble off."

SPOILING A GOOD DINNER.

'Come and dine with me on Thursday,' said my old friend Clayton. 'I am to have the company of three or four friends, and wish you to be one of the number.'

I accepted the invitation with pleasure, for I liked Clayton. We had been acquaintances from boyhood, and mature years had only tended to strengthen the attachments of youth. I also liked his wife. She, too, had been one of my early friends. Many an agreeable evening had I spent with them since their marriage; and if the story I am about to tell does not give them offence, I hope to spend many more in their pleasant society. As to the telling of the story, this is a part of my vocation; but in matters of this kind, I generally manage to embellish a little here and there, and to change names and vary incidents in such a way that the parties, who have been made to sit for their pictures, are hardly ever willing to see therein any likeness of themselves. And this being the case in the present instance, I hardly think I shall give any offence, although I am not unwilling that my friend's wife should at least have a remote idea that she might have been the original of my sketch.

Like all women, and men, too, Mrs. Clayton had her faults; and one of these I had frequently had occasion to notice. The fault was this: a habit of making the worst, instead of the best, of a thing. If she took a dress to be made, she always knew it wouldn't fit. If she laid out to start on a journey at a certain time, or to pay a visit, she knew it would rain. If one of her children were attacked with a fever and sore throat—not a very uncommon thing, by the way—she knew it was scarletina.

One evening I went home with her husband, per invitation, take tea. Mrs. Clayton expected me, and I was received with the warm welcome that always greeted my appearance. During a pause in the conversation that followed, I heard her say to her husband, in an undertone.

'I've made up some nice cakes for tea, but am almost sure they won't rise; just because I want them to.'

'Nonsense!' he said, half aloud, smiling. 'You are an old croaker!'

'That's too bad!' she replied, speaking aloud; and then turning towards me—'My husband calls me a croaker; but it is no such thing. I am no more of a croaker than he is.'

'Oh yes, Kate, you are a notorious croaker. You always look at the dark instead of the bright parts in a picture; while I always expect the sunshine, though too often, I must confess, I find the sky overcast with clouds. Still, imagine sunshine is much better than imaginary clouds—don't you think so?'

I could not but assent to this.

'I am not sure of that,' replied the wife. 'For my part, I would much rather expect clouds and get sunshine, than expect sunshine and get clouds. But I will leave you, gentlemen, to discuss this matter between yourselves while I go and see that our tea is not spoiled.'

In about an hour, during which time we had seen but little of Mrs. Clayton, the tea-bell was rung, and we retired from the parlor into the dining-room. We found her awaiting us at the tea-table, looking the very image of good humor.

'The cakes are light,' I said to myself, scarcely able to repress a smile. I had overheard her remark that she was almost sure they wouldn't rise good.

After we were helped round, my friend said, with a smile—

'All right, I see, Kate, notwithstanding—'

'Come, not one word, Mr. Clayton,' quickly spoke up his wife, interrupting him. 'It is too bad,' she added, addressing me, 'for my husband to do so. I said that I didn't believe the cakes would rise, and I had good reason for saying so. But it seems I was mistaken, for which I am very thankful, and I think he ought to be the same.'

'And so I am,' returned the husband, laughing. 'The cakes are first rate. I wouldn't have had them heavy and sour for the world.'

My friend put a little too much emphasis on the last part of the sentence, which caused his wife to ask rather seriously,

'Why not for the world, Mr. Clayton?'

'It would have grieved you so,' he replied, in an evasive manner, yet meaning just what he said.

'You think I would have taken it much, very much to heart, do you?'

'All ladies take such matters to heart, and I suppose they can't help it. It is rather a serious affair to have the cakes sour when a friend is invited to tea.'

I joined in, pretty much in the strain of the last sentence, in order to make Mrs. Clayton to feel less annoyed than she was evidently disposed to be by the first part of her husband's remark; and, as the latter was as much inclined as myself to restore the disturbed serenity of his wife's temper, slight as that disturbance was, he took good care to say nothing more that was not as soothing as oil. All now was as pleasant, during the tea hour, as a May morning, with the exception that the lady scolded the servant for neglecting to place a knife and fork at her plate, and during the time seemed to me to be in rather an unamiable mood. Not that I objected to the servant being scolded for her neglect, for she may have richly deserved it, and of this my fair friend was no doubt well convinced. The error consisted in scolding at the wrong time and place.

But to the dinner. Ten minutes before three o'clock I rang the bell at the house of my friend and was shown into the parlor, where I found Clayton and three guests. I made the fourth and the complement. Three o'clock was the hour for dinner. Just as the clock was striking that hour, our fair hostess entered, looking, as I thought, a little flushed and worried. After greeting us with great cordiality, she sat down beside her husband on the sofa, saying, as she did so—

'I'm sorry, gentlemen, but I'm afraid you will have to wait half an hour for your dinner. My cook has been as cross as she could be all the morning, and the fires as little inclined to burn as she to be pleasant.'

'No matter,' said I smiling. 'We will have the better appetites. Give your cook and the fires their own way, and all will come out right in the end.'

All joined in assuring her that it was the same to them, whether dinner were ready in ten minutes or an hour; but it did not make her feel in the least more comfortable, or tend to increase our appetites for the coming meal.

'I do think,' she said, after a few remarks, pro and con, had been made, all referring to the dinner, 'that the ordinary servants we get are the most perverse, self-willed, obstinate creatures in existence! Just at the time when you feel most dependent upon them, is the time when the will fail you. Our cook knows her business very well, and I have no trouble at all with her except when we have company, and then she always acts like the very old Scratch! I always dread to see her.'

Our hostess checked herself suddenly and looked a little confused, and our friend Clayton gave two or three emphatic 'ahems!' and struck off at right angles into a new subject. I believe there was not one of us who did not understand the whole sentence as well as if it had been finished; nor one of us who did not more than half regret having accepted the invitation to dine.

Nearly an hour passed, during which time our friend's wife came in and went out of the parlor frequently, the irregular corrugations about her eyebrows growing more and more distinct with the passage of every ten minutes. At length—but not until the cheerful expression of Clayton's face had begun to fade—dinner was announced. We all ascended, chattering freely, to the dining room, and were in, considering what had passed, a marvellous good humor. Our sharp appetites were considered a compensation for the delay.

We found Mrs. Clayton awaiting us in the dining room. Her smile was pleasant and cloud-dispersing; but it faded away too soon, and left the whole aspect of her face too much drawn down. There was a bright glow upon her cheeks—unusually bright—and in her eyes an intenseness of expression that took from them their highest charm. I saw that she was over excited, worried, and unhappy. Things had gone wrong with her, and she had not the philosophy to bear trials with good humor, nor the tact to conceal what she felt from the friends whom she had joined her husband in inviting to partake of the hospitalities of her table.

'At last!' was the greeting she gave us, to which was replied, in a pleasant tone—

'Better late than never, you know. We shall make up for the delay by doing greater justice to your elegant dinner.'

'You'll not find it very elegant, I fear. It's miserably cooked!' she replied, half smiling, half frowning.

'Let us be the judges, madam!' returned the one who had replied to her first remark.

'I think we shall render a much better account.'

'My wife, you know,' Clayton said, glancing first at the subject of his remark, and smiling a little sarcastically, 'generally looks upon the dark side.'

'Yes; I have not forgotten the sour cakes!' I replied, laughing.

But, somehow or other, the lady did not appear to relish the joke very well. She muttered something in reply that I could not understand; and then commenced doing her part towards helping her guests to the various dishes that were upon the table. She had not proceeded far in this before she discovered that the beef was 'burnt to a crisp,' the turkey 'raw,' the potatoes 'soggy,' and the gravy as 'black as a coal.'

'Never mind, my dear,' said her husband, on her declaring that the beef was burnt to a crisp, 'it's only on the outside. All is right within. Here's a slice that would tickle the palate of an alderman, and there are plenty more here just like it. The beef will do very well. Don't run it down until we begin, and then speak up for the cook, which you may do with a clear conscience.'

'I'm sure the slice you have helped Mr. B. to is not fit to eat. Go, John, and take Mr. B.'s place up for a better piece.'

'Beg pardon, madam!' said Mr. B. 'I couldn't ask anything better. I like beef well done, and always prefer an outside piece.'

But nothing would do. Mr. B.'s plate had to go up, and an exchange be made for a more juicy slice of beef, which, if what Mr. B. said was strictly true, was not as agreeable to his palate as the other.

'Will you have some of this gravy?' the lady asked, looking at me. 'It's as black as a coal,' she added, turning it up from the bottom with a spoon.

'I'll take some if you please,' I answered.

The gravy certainly was rather darker than I was in the habit of seeing it, but yet about as near the color of a coal as the meat was to being burnt to a crisp. There was nothing unpleasant in its taste.

'I don't believe you can eat this turkey, Mr. C.' she said a few minutes afterwards, as she was helping the individual she addressed to a piece of turkey that had been carved at a side table by the waiter, and placed before her—'It's raw!'

'I like even fowls a little rare,' replied Mr. C. 'It will just suit me.'

'It's well you are all easily suited,' returned Mrs. Clayton. 'I call the whole dinner about the worst cooked I have ever seen. I am mortified to death about it.'

But it did no good. The piece of lemon pudding was pushed aside.

'Try some of the cocoa-nut pudding. I am sure that is without fault,' I said, hoping to restore some of her lost equanimity.

'I suppose that is no better than the rest,' she said. 'It would be strange if it were an exception.'

'Only try it?' I urged.

In this I was joined by others.

Although I perceived no fault whatever in the pudding, I confess that I saw her make preparations for trying it with some misgiving. If this should prove defective, there was little hope of our getting away from the dinner table with cheerful spirits.

'It's as dry as a chip,' almost stunned me, even while these thoughts were passing through my mind, though spoken in a low querulous tone.

From that moment I gave up. I spoke not another word. The fruits came on, and we ate them in silence. Poor Clayton looked miserable. He was mortified and worried. We were all relieved when the signal was given for retiring, and gladly escaped from the presence of our hostess, who had the kindness to say to us, that if we ever dined with her again, she hoped she would be able to give us something fit to eat!

'I wouldn't give codfish and potatoes, with a cheerful countenance presiding over them, for a hundred such dinners,' said B. to me, as he walked away from the house of my friend Clayton. 'It was made up of every delicacy I could desire, but the sauce of cheerfulness and good humor was not there. Bless me! If I had such a wife I would—'

'What would you do?' I said, laughing, as he paused to think what he would do.

'Never invite my friends to dine with me,' he said, joining in my laugh. 'But isn't it too bad,' he continued, speaking less emphatically, for a woman of Mrs. Clayton's good sense to spoil a dinner in the way she did ours to-day? If anything was wrong, why didn't she try to make it up by bright looks instead of dark ones?'

'It's her weakness and want of thought,' I replied.

'Her husband ought to teach her better. He ought to make her think.'

'It isn't always so easy a thing to make a woman do as you please, friend B.,' I said. 'And the hardest thing of all is to make her give up her peculiar humor and habits of mind. If she can be made to see how much she affects the comforts and happiness of others by their indulgence, she may do better, or if of her own accord; but she isn't a person to be driven from her ground by any prompt and bold assault upon, or ridicule of her foibles and weaknesses. And if ever you get a wife, you will find this out. Mrs. Clayton is a very excellent woman. All her friends like her. But she has the fault of making the worst instead of the best of a thing. This she cannot help. But she can help annoying others with its untimely and unlady-like exhibition; and I am very much in hope that her being led so far astray to-day will make her as sensible as she ought to be of her defect of character, and prevent an undue exposure of it on another occasion. At least my charity goes so far.'

The next time I took tea with my friend, the biscuit were a little heavy, but not a word was said about it; nor was there a cloud upon Mrs. Clayton's brow! Whether there had been a certain lecture or not on the subject of the dinner, I had no means of knowing; nor whether the subject had been alluded to or not between my friend and his wife. Enough that a change had come over her in this particular, and a very agreeable one. For this there was, of course, a cause, as there is for all effects. But satisfied with the effect, we shall not waste time in speculating upon, or endeavoring to find out the cause.—T. S. ARTHUR.

THE PRESS. The power of the press has no rival. Were it not more mighty than arms, why should its aid be called to support and finish the work which armies have only begun? It holds a dominion over public sentiment, which arms can never arrive at or maintain. Even when accident has given the sword a momentary ascendancy, without the aid of the press, how soon does the bearer solicit the influence of the press to support it. No despot, let him be surrounded with his artillery, and wallowed about with bayonets, could support his despotism for a moment against the power of a free press; or why has history no record of a single instance? The chains, once thrown from that engine of mightier power than arms can give, the eyes of the people are opened, and their own chains become like flax in the flames. Hence the policy of usurpers, which induces them to enslave the press, as the only means of riveting the chains they have thrown over the people.

VIRTUE. The creations of the sculptor may moulder into dust; the wealth of the bard may wither; the throne of the conqueror may be shivered by an opposing power, into atoms;—the fame of the warrior may no longer be hymned by the recording minstrel; the hope of the youth may be disappointed; but that which hallows the cottage, and sheds a glory around the palace—virtue—shall never decay. It is celebrated by the angels of God—it is written on the pillars of heaven and reflected down to earth.

MORAL OF BELL-HOOD. The Knickerbocker thus discourses:—Here is a young lady who grows thin because she is not a belle. Has she considered what the life of a beauty is? To be flattered by everybody, besieged with 'blarney' and lies, mock affection and insincere friendship; to be stared at in the street, and to be conscious that beauty is preferred to worth; to feel inferior and be superior in place; to be obliged to still every true emotion of the heart; never to love, but to be married in obedience to what the fashionable world says she ought to do; finally, to wear false hair, false teeth, and to be false in everything; and dying, give directions about the grave dress, as becoming or not. My dear young lady, be a milk-maid; dress your rich tresses in the glass of the still water; love some honest lad who would doat upon you; become the mother of good men; die with some sense that you have not lived in vain; leave the memory of good deeds to the poor that you were a good mother, a nice house-keeper, a frugal wife; and such a reputation is worth all the homage beauty receives, a thousand times over.

BE SOMETHING. One principle of the Moslem creed is, that every person shall have some trade. Thus should it be the world over. See that young man, no matter what are his circumstances or prospects, if he has no plan he will never accomplish much. If he relies upon his present possessions, or upon the anticipated favors of fortune, ten to one if his five hopes are not blighted, and he find, too late, that the only path to true greatness is by application. The following maxim will apply to those in every condition in society, who are about entering upon the stage of active life: Choose, after mature deliberation and consultation with judicious friends, that vocation which appears most suitable for you. Be not diverted from your purpose, let nothing prevent you from qualifying yourself thoroughly for it, then pursue it with unremitting diligence and you will honor yourself, and be a blessing to the community.

TOLERATION. The toleration of the spoiler towards the despoiled; continuing just as long as the latter does not attempt to withhold the booty! There is an infinity of insolence in that word—toleration. Men professing to be Christians, indeed, tolerating the worship of God by a fellow Christian, and contenting themselves with merely taking for their own, a portion of his goods and chattels! There is toleration for gambling-houses all over the metropolis; for tea-gardens and open shops on the Sabbath; for gin-palaces in all directions; for the thousands and tens of thousands of prostitutes who nightly defile our streets and public ways with obscenity; and the dissenter has also toleration, and ought, forsooth, to be well contented to pay for it.

ROUGH AND READY ASSOCIATION. An adjourned meeting of the "Rough and Ready Association" of Boston, was held at the Exchange Coffee House in that city, on the evening of the 19th ult. The following Resolutions offered by Maj. B. H. Norton, were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, since the last meeting of this Association, success in every conflict has covered the American Arms with glory. Therefore,—

Resolved—That whatever views may be entertained as to the justice of the War with Mexico, we fully concur in the opinion, that it is not unbecoming a Moral and Religious people to rejoice at the Victories obtained over their Enemies.

Resolved—That the bravery, magnanimity and cool sagacity displayed by Major General Zachary Taylor, and the Officers and soldiers under his command, in the Battles of 'Palo Alto,' 'Resaca de la Palma,' 'Monterey,' and in the recent bloody conflict at 'Buena Vista,' entitle them to the warmest gratitude of every American heart.

Resolved—That in the character of Zachary Taylor, as displayed on the Battle field—in his correspondence with the National Government, and in his domestic relations, we have a strong guaranty of his ability to discharge his duty to his country, in whatever situation he may be placed.

Resolved—That the recent investment and conquest of the 'City of Vera Cruz,' and 'Castle of San Juan de Ulla,' by the troops under the command of General Winfield Scott, aided by the Naval Force under the command of Commodore Conner and Perry, with so little sacrifice of life on our part, is a glorious evidence of the military skill displayed by the 'Hero of Lundy's Lane,' in planning the attack, and the bravery of American troops in accomplishing the great result.

Resolved—That while we exult at the success of our arms, we deeply sympathize with the bereaved friends of those brave spirits, who so nobly obeyed the call of their country, and fell gallantly fighting for the honor of her flag.

Resolved—That the heroic valor displayed by Brown, Vinton and Lincoln, New England's noble sons, which resulted in their death, will cause their memories to be cherished to the end of time.

Resolved—That when the bodies of these brave men shall be brought from the battle field to be deposited in the native land, a delegation from this Association will accompany the remains to their last resting place.

But it did no good. The piece of lemon pudding was pushed aside.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

SATURDAY, MAY 1, 1847.

John A. Green, Editor.

LET THERE BE A RUSH!! We once more remind all who are indebted to us, and in particular for several years, to pay without delay as our creditors want money by the eighth of May. We have called upon a great number and written to others without effect, and if we are hardly and perhaps legally pressed, our remedy must be different from a "dun." We wish to be patient, but patience cannot endure for a series of years. These words are directed more especially to those who have owed us for three, five and even ten years. Put all hands to the work and pay us one hundred and twenty-five dollars, (it is not a very large sum), and then we can settle some of our debts, feel in better spirits, and consequently labor in future more for your edification.

THE RESULT. Luther Coleman, the Engineer, late of the Fall River Railroad, who was bound over in the sum of five hundred dollars to take his trial at Dedham, on a charge of causing the late accident upon the Fall River Railroad, by which two persons lost their lives, has been discharged, the Grand Jury finding no bill against him.

APPOINTMENT. Mr. Cyrus A. Dyer has been appointed Post Master of South Abington, in place of Mr. William Bonney, deceased.

VIRGINIA. The whigs have gained one or more members of Congress, but the Legislature still remains democratic.

CONCERT. The entertainment of Messrs. Covert & Dodge and the Misses Macomber, on Thursday evening, was well attended notwithstanding the unfavorable state of the weather. These vocalists are favorably known throughout New England, and wherever they go are sure to draw full houses. The Misses Macomber, in their performance on the violin and violoncello, are unrivalled; the simple announcement of their names is sufficient security of a rich entertainment.

GENERAL COURT. The Legislature of the "Old Bay State" adjourned, sine die, on Monday last, having been in session one hundred and thirteen days. Two hundred and eighty bills and one hundred and three resolves have been passed.

The bill to repeal the Insolvent Law failed in one branch.

Resolves against the Mexican war were passed, and thanks to Maj. Gen. Taylor and his army indefinitely postponed.

The bill to incorporate the Norfolk County Railroad has become a law. This road is designed to answer the necessity of a direct land route to New York.

MAY DAY NIGHT. We would call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of the musical entertainment to be given by Mr. Felt, assisted by a Glee Class in this town, which has been under his instruction, and several ladies and gentlemen who have kindly volunteered. We understand that arrangements are made to render it one that will afford much gratification to all who may be present. Among the performances not mentioned in the programme, is a quartette by four young ladies. We learn that the proceeds go, in part, to pay the expenses of the above class, who assist on the occasion, and while our citizens liberally patronize strangers who come among us, they will not forget those who are endeavoring to improve the music among our own people.

A TOWNSMAN. Our friends will pardon the egotism of transferring to the columns of the Patriot, the following paragraph, so complimentary to our kinsman FREEMAN HUNT, well known here as a native of this town, and throughout the Commercial world, as the editor of the Merchant's Magazine. It is copied from the New York "Evening Mirror." It will, we feel quite sure, be highly gratifying to his old school mates, and afford matter of honest pride to the citizens of a town that has furnished so many eminent and self-made men.

A WELL-MERITED HONOR. We learn by papers received by the Cambria that Freeman Hunt, Esq., the editor of the Merchant's Magazine, has been elected a corresponding member of the "Statistical Society of London." This we believe is the first instance of that honor having been conferred on a citizen of this commercial emporium of the New World. The Statistical Society of London numbers among its list of officers and members many of the most distinguished literary men and statesmen of England. It is under the patronage of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and its President, Lord Ashley, as a member of Parliament, has distinguished himself by his benevolent efforts to ameliorate the condition of the factory operatives by diminishing the hours of labor. The honor conferred upon Mr. Hunt by this society is well deserved, and his familiarity with the commercial statistics of this great and growing country, admirably qualify him to contribute to the advancement of its interests. There is no man in the United States who can better promote the objects of this excellent society. Every number of his Magazine is a monument of his untiring industry and patient investigation in statistical science.

CAPTURED CANNONS. The number of cannons captured by the American forces in Mexico exceeds five hundred, most of them very heavy pieces. There were captured at Resaca de la Palma, seven; at Matamoras, say thirty; at Monterey about fifty; at Vera Cruz, town and castle, four hundred; at Alvarado, sixty—total, five hundred thirty-eight. If stacked together, they would make quite a pyramid.

In this town, 20th ult., Mr. William A. Kidder, aged 45.

Vivid and striking are the combinations of prosperity and adversity, joy and sorrow, connected with the life of him whose name is here numbered with those who once were but are not.

Ambition and industry were prominent and almost unbounded traits of his life, and these were ever in active exercise. As his pathway seemed strewn with disappointments, yet, sunshine intermingling therewith, hope seemed beckoning him on to perseverance, portraying happier days and more permanent prosperity.

As a husband, father, son, brother and friend, words are but a faint echo many hearts can testify of his fidelity.

The present fall confirms by living witnesses his kind, obliging and generous deportment through long years of friendly intercourse. Long will it be remembered in the vista of the past, and never those words of deep, constant, confidential love to his dear family. His life seemed one combination of all they wished in the relation he sustained.

In consequence of repeated sickness and misfortunes his constitution became much impaired, and his ambition unabated poorly harmonized with his strength of body. His mind, as if weary of longer sympathizing with him, became subject to despondency, refusing to be comforted, even by her who had cheered and encouraged in every hour of trial, sharing all his joys and participating in all his sorrows.

Consistently so we throw the mantle of Charity over his past weakness, believing that reason in a moment as it were became entirely disenthroned, sensibility unconscious, his mind a blank waste.

Very deep is the sympathy of numerous friends to his afflicted family, among whom were that faithful "band of brothers" with whom, for the last year or two he had been connected. They performed their last sad duty with much respect to their departed brother and satisfaction to his mourning family.

May God in mercy be a father to his fatherless children and the widow's God in this trying and afflictive dispensation.

POETRY.

THE SHIP BUILDERS.

BY J. C. WHITTIER.

The sky is ruddy in the East,
The earth is grey below,
And, spectral in the river mist,
Our late, white timbers show.
Up!—let the sound of measured stroke
And grating saw begin;
The broad-axe to the gnarled oak,
The mallet to the pin.

Hark!—Roars the bellows, blast on blast,
The sooty smithy jars,
And fire-sparks, rising far and fast,
Are falling with the stars.
All day for us the smith shall stand
Beside that flashing forge;
All day for us his heavy hand
The groaning anvil scourge.

Gee up!—Gee ho!—The panting team
For us is toiling near;
For us the raftsmen down the stream
Their island barges steer.
Rings out for us the axe man's stroke
In forests old and still—
For us the century-circled oak
Falls crushing down his hill.

Up!—Up!—in nobler toil than ours
No craftsman bears a part;
We make of Nature's giant powers,
The slaves of human Art.
Lay rib to rib, and beam to beam,
And drive the trunnels free;
Not faithless joint nor yawning seam
Shall tempt the searching sea.

Where'er the keel of our good ship
The sea's rough field shall plough—
Where'er her tossing spars shall drip
With salt spray caught below—
That ship must heed her master's beck,
Her helm obey his hand,
And seamen tread her reeling deck
As if they trod the land.

Her oaken ribs the vulture-beak
Of northern ice may peel—
The sunken rock and coral peak
May grate along her keel;
And know we will the painted shell
We give to wind and wave,
Must float, the sailor's citadel,
Or sink, the sailor's grave.

Ho!—strike away the bars and blocks,
And set the good ship free!
Why lingers on these dusty rocks
The young bride of the sea?
Look!—how she moves down the grooves
In graceful beauty now!
How lowly on the breast she loves
Sinks down her virgin brow!

God bless her, whoso'er the breeze
Her snowy wing shall fan,
Aside the frozen Hebrides,
Or sultry Hindostan!—
Where'er, in mart or on the main,
With peaceful flag unfurled,
She helps to wind the silken chain

Speed on the ship!—But let her bear
No merchandise of sin,
No groaning cargo of despair
Her roomy hold within.
No Lethian drug for Eastern lands,
Nor poison draught for ours,
But honest fruits of toiling hands,
And Nature's sun and showers.

Be hers the Prairie's golden grain,
The Desert's golden sand,
The clustered fruits of sunny Spain,
The spice of Moming-land;
Her pathway on the open main
May blessings follow free,
And glad hearts welcome back again
Her white sails from the sea.

RULES FOR SUCCESS.
Be firm; one constant element in luck
Is genuine, solid, old Teutonic pluck;
See von tall shaft; it felt the earthquake's thrill,
Clung to its base, and greets the sunrise still.
Stick to your aim; the mongrel's hold will slip,
But only crow-bars loose the bull dog's grip;
Small as he looks, the jaw that never yields,
Drags down the bellowing monarch of the fields.

ANECDOTES.

A little lawyer appearing as evidence in one of the courts, was asked by a gigantic counsellor, what profession he was of; and having replied he was an attorney, "You a lawyer," said Brief, "why, I can put you in my pocket."

"Very likely you may," replied the other, "and if you do, you will have more law in your pocket than you ever had in your head."

In the district school at Sandwich, last winter the master informed a little girl that Sunday is the first day in the week, and inquired of her, "What day is Monday?" "Washing-day, sir," she promptly answered.

Charles Lamb, one afternoon having taken a seat in a crowded omnibus, a stout gentleman subsequently looked in and politely asked "all full inside?" "I don't know how it may be with the other passengers," answered Lamb, "but the last piece of oyster-pie did the business for me."

"The world must soon stop," said a merchant to Prof. Mitchell.

"Why? It has got along very well for six thousand years."

"Yes, but it has never been able to make both ends meet, and I don't believe it ever will."

MISCELLANY.

HOLD ON!

'This is the place, Mary; isn't it beautiful?' exclaimed a rough-looking, yet handsome man, as he turned to his wife; 'I knew 'twould suit you, for it overlooks the sea.'

'I admire your taste, Edward; this is certainly a darling little nook. If you was but to stay with us, my happiness would be complete.'

'Never mind,' rejoined the sailor—for he was a sea-captain—'never mind; two good voyages more, and I'll snuggle down here as contented as you would wish to have me be.'

The wife sighed, but presently broke into a loud, joyous laugh; for on nearing their beautiful cottage, they saw Henry and Billy, their twin boys, who had arrived at the house before them, mounted upon the piazza, one shouting and giving orders, sailor fashion, the other reconnoitering in their direction, with a spy-glass almost as large as himself; and in the centre and at each end, a flag which they had rudely made, waving them welcome.

'Huzza!' they shouted merrily, as their parents came in sight, 'here they come! heave out your anchors! steady, boys, steady!'

'Sailors, every inch of you, you rogues,' said the father, as he joined them; 'and as soon as you are old enough to command, I've got a fine little craft apiece for you.'

The happy ones entered the house, and, after inspecting every part of their new home, they retired, innocent and contented.

A happy, joyous month was spent by the sailor's family. And now the bright blue star-gazers, the violets, had all departed; the tiny warblers were seeking a new home; the white mists gathered on the tops of the giant mountains, earlier by an hour; and the sky had lent its sunny hues to another climate.

The summer queen was preparing to lie down in slumber with flowers.

'Now, Mary,' said Edward to his wife, 'you must consent to let the boys go, just this one short trip. Come, if you will, I'll promise you I'll stay at home after this voyage.'

The mother looked at her twins. Well might pride be sanctioned in that gentle woman's heart, as she gazed on those noble boys, whose eyes were pleading, with the eloquence of silence, that their father's request might be granted.

'How can I live without them?' she murmured, as the big tears started.

'But think, Mary; only a month, or at most two.'

Reluctantly she consented; and soon was she busily employed making preparations for their departure.

'After all,' said Henry, on the day on which they were to sail—after all, I don't know how we shall get along without mother, Bill. You can't tell how I wanted to cry last night, when she told us we were asleep, and came and prayed so sweetly by our pillow; do you remember how she wept as she said, 'Oh God! protect my boys on the great deep, and keep them in the hollow of thine hand.' Are you afraid, Bill?

'Afraid of what?' answered his brother, who was finishing a little sketch, on which a few tears had fallen, as Henry alluded to their mother.

'Why, afraid to go to sea. I mean if a dreadful storm should rush from the mountains and sweep over the ocean, should you be afraid? I should not, after hearing such a prayer as that from my mother's lips; for I know God will answer that petition.'

Night came on, and the wife and mother sat alone in that lovely cottage. She had said farewell to her ocean bound treasures, and a dark foreboding was in heart. Her voice broke not the stillness of her deserted home; but her hands were clasped, her eyes upraised—her heart was praying to God. How holy was that mother's love!

Let us return to the sea-captain and his sons. For a while they were charmed with the novelty incident to a sea life; but soon their bright faces grew sad, and their noisy mirth hushed, as sweet, thronging thoughts of their mother and home came stealing into their childish hearts.

'They felt just as if mother was dead,' they said, and the father could not comfort them.

They had been out nearly a week, when one night, towards morning, Henry waked his brother, exclaiming, 'Oh! William, how can you sleep, when the waves are dashing like mad against the vessel's side? There is a dreadful storm, a terrible storm! Don't you feel the ship leap?—oh! William, what an awful peal of thunder that was! we shall be drowned, we shall certainly be drowned!'

At that moment the cabin seemed on fire, so brilliant was the lightning flash that streamed in the little window at the bulk-head.

'Henry, do you remember what you told me the day we left mother? You said you should not be afraid, after hearing her prayer, even if there should be a tempest. Let us trust in God. Henry, let us pray.'

Amid the howl of the hurricane, like the rejoicing of ten thousand demons—amid the rattling of the shrouds, (death shrouds, indeed,) the hoarse orders of the commander, the tramp of the men, and the lurching of the mighty ship, arose the sweet voices of those innocent children, as they quoted from the prayer of their parent the words, 'Lord keep us in the hollow of thine hand!'

All night, and till morning came, the twins clung to their berths. Only once had the captain been down: he encouraged them with words of cheer, and strove to smile. But they received his kind kiss with sinking hearts—for, under the assumed cheerfulness of his countenance, they saw the strong lines of despair.

Morning broke again over the stormy deep.

Yet the awful storm continued, more furious than in the outset. The twins had slept none, but under the influence of a holy mother's education, they had ceased not to pray. And now, as the water came pouring down into the cabin, they managed to get out of their berths, and with much difficulty gained the cabin stairs.

'If I could only see father!' said William, in agony; and he shouted 'Father! father!'

'Go down,' said the captain in tones of command. They dared not disobey, and, drenched and wet, they crawled into the cabin.

There were passengers on board—an aged man, his daughter, and her little son. She was on her way to a distant shore to meet her husband.

They too had come into the cabin. There they sat, with fear pictured upon their faces, and the young mother wept over her child. He, unconscious of all danger, laughed and crowed merrily.

Again the waters poured over the state room stairs, and the captain came hastily down.

'No hope,' he cried, 'we are gone. The vessel is driving on towards the shore, and in this fearful tempest, we shall be dashed to pieces. Here are ropes, secure yourselves as best you can. My poor boys,' he exclaimed, and the strong man drew them closer to his heart and wept aloud. 'God help your poor mother when we are gone!'

'Let us go on deck with you, father, oh! do not leave us here to die alone; we want to die with you, father; let us go on deck, oh! let us go on deck!'

'Well boys, since you wish it and as we must perish, let us perish together,' and assisting them on deck, he lashed them to the mast.

The spray dashed over them; a huge wave for a moment engulfed the vessel, and when the half-blinded boys could look forth, the captain was no where to be seen.

The tempest howled a death requiem. 'Father, O, my father; where is father?' they shrieked, and caught but the wild whistling of the hurricane answered them.

The vessel neared the shore. Every thing was carried away that was moveable, yet right onward plunged the ship, madly careering toward the breakers, and a deafening shriek mingled with its sudden boom as it struck.

The mountain waves had lifted her and left her securely fastened in a ragged, frightful gap of the wet black rocks.

'The boat! the boat!' shouted the sailors; and in an instant the boat was lowered into the whirling waters. One after another sprang over the side of the vessel; some met with a frightful death against the sharp ledges; a few gained the frail thing, which was but to prolong their sufferings only a short time.

'Take us! O, take us!' cried the twins. But vainly they stretched out their arms towards the crew; they would not see, they would not answer, and the hearts of the poor boys almost ceased to beat, as the boat put off from them.

There they were alone—no! not alone, for the faint wailing of the poor little baby came up from below, and for a moment they were cheered by the thought that they were not the only sufferers. They had been securely fastened to the mast, the upper part of which had been wrenched off by the fury of the tempest winds.

Their clothes were drenched, they were cold, hungry, and almost stiff. Their eyes were red with weeping. 'Can't you get round here, Bill? I feel just as if I was dying,' said Henry.

'Remember our mother's prayer, Henry, and I'll try to come to you.'

'God has forgotten us!' said Henry, 'and mother, O, if I could only see our mother!'

'Don't give up, Henry, and don't say again God has forgotten us; our mother would weep to hear such an expression from you; see, I am almost round, and if the spray keeps back a few minutes longer I'll be there with you. Hold on, Henry! may be some vessel will come along this way, and if we keep our courage up, we'll perhaps be saved yet. Remember mother's prayer. See, I can touch you in a moment, and if we do die, we will die in each other's arms. But try to live, dear Henry, try to live, dear brother, for our mother's sake; we have no father now!'

Night has again come on the deep. No wonder those poor boys feared in the horrible darkness. William was much the bravest, and his words as they locked together on the heaving wreck cheered his brother, and nerved him with more courage.

Another day on the deep. They could yet hear the faint cry of the infant below, but they were almost senseless. Famine gnawed into their very vitals, and they had long ceased to speak, or even move.

'Bear away to the height, there; something looks queer off there; halloo, my spy-glass.'

These words were uttered by a sturdy-looking sailor, the mate of the brig Dolphin, bound for New Orleans.

'Aye, aye Sir!' responded the steersman and the queer looking craft soon hove in sight.

'What do you see on board? Is it worth while to go off there?' said the captain, as the mate was reconnoitering.

'There's something human. Whether man or boy—I can't tell—close by the mast. Look yourself, sir.'

'Yes, said the captain, 'there's something there, certainly. But how can we get there with any degree of safety?'

'I know that place like a book, Sir, and there's a cove round the south side, where we could easily reach the rocks. Give me a few men, Sir, and I'll venture to board her.'

'Very well, Mr. MacLay,' said the captain, 'you may try.'

The vessel now was at anchor, and the brave men with four of the seamen plied the oars, and brought the boat safely round. They clambered the huge rocks, and stopped not until they were on the quarter-deck of the once beautiful ship.

'Save us!' exclaimed the mate, 'but here's a sight my old eyes never expected to see.' And the man burst into tears as he went up close to the bodies of the sweet boys.

Each had his arms about the neck of the other, their heads hanging over each others shoulder.

'Quick, Bill, lend us your clasp knife; there may be life in them, and d'ye bear them to the boat, and off to the vessel. I'll stay here till you return.' The bodies of the lads were lifted into the boat, and the men were soon on board the Dolphin.

In the meantime, the mate had descended the stairs of the cabin, which he found covered with water: holding on the companion-way he gazed around. Upon the floor lay an old silver-haired man, his arms flung over his head, his gray hairs streaming in the water, his eyes wide open, gazed with their rayless orbs full in the face of the old sailor.

Stepping carefully down, the mate next went into one of the state-rooms. A young female was lying dead, with her infant beside her. One tiny hand twined in the long hair of its mother, the other clutching the coverlet. The little creature looked calm and lovely in its death-like sleep, but the countenance of the woman was distorted, and agonizing to gaze upon.

He had scarcely finished the survey, when he heard the steps of the men who had returned. He called them down, and mournfully gave directions that the dead be taken to the vessel, and given a Christian burial.

It was near evening, when the last of the bodies were carried aboard. The captain did not see them, for he had discovered signs of life in the poor boys, and he was engaged in resuscitating their almost inanimate forms.

'They can't have been here long, sir, said the old mate. I should think from the condition of the wreck, not more than three or four days. Shouldn't wonder if the baby could be brought to.'

'O! is there an infant aboard?' exclaimed the captain's wife, as she started from the couch where she had been breathlessly gazing at the children, 'is there an infant here? Bring it into the cabin immediately. It may be alive.'

With her own hands, she took the baby, wrapped it in flannels and poured some warm liquid into its little mouth.

'It is alive,' she almost shouted, as she placed her hand upon its beating heart. 'It is alive; sweet innocent, see it uncloset its eyes; God be praised! are you sure, very sure, that the mother is dead?'

'I think there can be no mistake that the mother and the old gentleman are quite dead. Mr. Hart pronounces them so, and they are neatly laid out for burial; perhaps you will go in captain, and look at them yourself,' he continued, addressing the commander.

Captain L., accompanied by his mate, and Mr. Hart, (a gentleman who was preparing to be a physician), went into the round house. The captain advanced directly to the corpses, who were lying side by side, and uncovered their faces.

Transfixed with horror, he stood. His body bent over, his eyes rolling wildly, and speechless, and white as the dead before him. There lay his white haired father, and his only sister. He was taken to his state room almost senseless, only uttering the words, 'My father! my sister!' and through the whole of that night, were his wanderings repeated, 'my father, my sister.'

On the following day, the twin boys were much better, and the babe had almost recovered. The captain had almost received a shock, which had prostrated him on a bed of sickness; and, while raving in delirium, his only relatives were lowered in the deep.

One month more, and the Dolphin was now an emaciated and haggard man, with settled melancholy stamped on his features, began immediately to make inquiries as to the whereabouts of his brother in law.

His search was fruitless. He had been dead for some time, and the sweet orphan was adopted by the captain.

Through his exertions, the twins were sent immediately home. In a short time, they trod again their native sod, and accompanied by one of the crew, soon came in sight of the little cottage.

There was an air of dreariness about it, that chilled the little warmth that had been left in their hearts at the death of their father.

'O! William, what if we have no mother,' said Henry, as they neared the closed door of the cottage.

William spoke not, but ran hastily, and raised the latch of the door. It opened to their touch, and they entered the parlor. No one was there, and the room was perfectly dark.

Almost noiselessly, they glided to the kitchen door, and silently opened it. As they did so, an aged woman suddenly arose, and glancing hastily at them, held up both hands, exclaiming 'Lord save us, are they the young masters, or their ghosts?'

'Where is mother?' both boys eagerly asked of the old servant. 'Where is mother?'

'It's them, as my soul lives,' she continued, 'and how will I break the news?'

'What news, Maggie; and where's mother? and a bright spot rested upon their pale faces, and their eager eyes sparkled, but the glow vanished, and their eyes grew dim with tears, as Maggie said,

'Her last words were, "Lord keep them in the hollow of thine hand"; and sure enough he did keep them, poor dear lads, and they've come home, fatherless, motherless, but you'll bear up under it, poor orphans, won't you? and the good servant, sobbing and weeping, endeavored to comfort them.

'Let's go back, and I hope we'll be wrecked and drowned,' exclaimed Henry. 'Mother's dead, father sleeps in the dark waters, and I want to die too.'

'Henry, dear Henry,' said William, 'what a wicked wish, when our dear mother prayed that precious prayer with her last breath. Let us go to her grave, kneel on the sod, and ask her God, and our Father now, to bless us; and then, dear brother, we will bid adieu to our home, for I do not wish to live here now; we will go back again, Henry, and learn to be sailors as our dear parent was, and perhaps we shall make our last bed by his side, beneath the blue of the ocean.'

After hearing the particulars of their mother's death, how she had told of the loss of the ship while she was dying, they saw her last resting place, and left the pleasant cottage home forever.

The captain gave them a passage back; and took them under his care, and procured them situations in the city of New Orleans.

Twelve years have elapsed since the orphan's bereavement. Henry is an artist of great talent, and a wealthy man. William, as a lawyer, is at the head of his profession; and in the parlor of the elegant mansion of each, may be seen a massive gold frame, within which, on a white ground are traced the following words:

"Lord, keep them in the hollow of thine hand."

And underneath—

"Dear Mother, the Lord has kept us."

The little orphan who was taken with them off the wreck, is now an officer in the navy, esteemed for benevolence and piety, and loved by all who know him.

A ROMAN SENATOR. When the Emperor Vespasian commanded a Roman Senator to give his voice against the interests of his country, and threatened him with immediate death if he spoke on the other side, the Roman, conscious that the attempt to serve the people was in his power, though the event was ever so uncertain, answered with a smile, 'Did I ever tell you that I was immortal? My virtue is at my own disposal; my life is at yours. Do what you will, I shall do what I ought; and if I fall in the service of my country, I shall have more triumph in death than you in all your laurels.'

Soot. Save the soot from the stovepipes—preserve it dry, and as soon as the Cucumbers, Melon, Squash, and Pumpkin vines begin to make their appearance, dust them well with it. If the rain washes them—dust them again—and so continue to do until they are out of the way of insects. This has been found by experience to be the easiest, cheapest and best mode to prevent the depredations of the black fly, yellow bug, and worm. Soot is also one of the best manures for all vegetables.

MINNESOTA.

This new territory is bounded on the North by Canada West; on the East by Michigan and Wisconsin; on the South by the parallel 43° 30', which is the most northern line of Iowa; and on the West by the river Sioux and Red River of the North. The line separating Minnesota from Michigan, is in Lake Superior to the Falls of the St. Louis river, and thence south till it strikes the river St. Croix, which it follows to the Mississippi. Thence down the Mississippi to lat. 43° 1-2, the place of beginning.

Embraced within these boundaries there are about ninety thousand square miles—equal to fifty eight millions of acres. It is nearly the same latitude as the State of Maine. In area it exceeds the Island of Great Britain, and it is near equal to France. Comparing it with old States—it is as large as New York and Pennsylvania. For the production of wheat and the grasses its soil and climate are favorable.

Now, it appears to the people of the United States as extremely distant and interior. So did Wisconsin fifteen years ago. In commercial advantages, it will not be one of the most favored of the States, nor yet one of the least.

By means of Lake Superior, on which it borders for more than one hundred miles, from Pigeon River to Fond du Lac, its northern and middle portion will have cheap communication with all the Lake shores, and the Atlantic, and through the Upper Mississippi and St. Peter's Rivers, will hold easy intercourse with the whole great valley below.

VIRTUE. The everlasting hills will crumble to dust, but the influence of a good act shall never die. The earth will grow old and perish, but virtue in the heart will be ever green and flourish throughout eternity. The moon and stars will grow dim, and the sun roll from the heavens, but true religion and undefiled will grow brighter and brighter, and not cease to exist while God himself shall live.

HORSE RADISH. If you have not a bed of this most healthful and palatable root, prepare a bed on some moist border and plant one. It is certainly one of the best condiments used on the dinner table—and is besides one of the very best substances to make a syrup of for colds and coughs.

THE BETTER WAY. The sons of the poor die rich, while the sons of the rich die poor. What encouragement to toil through life in acquiring wealth to ruin our children! Better to go with our money as we go along—educate our sons—secure their virtues by habits of industry and study, and let them take care of themselves.

ROBBERY. The store of Mr. John Russell, Merchant Tailor, under the Town Hall in this place, was forcibly entered through one of the windows, on Monday night last, and robbed of goods to the amount of between three and four hundred dollars. The robbers were evidently well acquainted with the premises, and particular in the selection of goods, taking those of the most value and leaving only the very cheapest articles. Even the buttons and sewing silk were assorted and the most valuable selected.

By this transaction Mr. Russell has lost his all; been robbed of earnings gleaned from years of patient industry and laborious toil. Will not that spirit of philanthropy that has heretofore been so ready to assist those who have met with losses by fire and otherwise, lend an assisting hand to Mr. Russell? Let those who in similar circumstances have been assisted, move in this matter at once, and extend the same kindness to another that they have in their necessity received, remembering that although the loss in the present instance does not exceed a few hundred dollars, it is his all.

Those in want of clothing should remember neighbor Russell, and recollect they can assist a friend in distress at the same time they are benefiting themselves. In getting up a tasty garment he cannot be surpassed by any of his profession.

COMPOSITION. We recently had the pleasure of examining the "composition book" of a little girl of this place which we think contains evidence of genius that would do credit to an older head. Our little friend is but nine years of age, yet we are assured by her mother that her compositions have received no corrections except in the punctuation and the capital letters. We have been permitted to copy the following specimen:

THE SUN.
How fine the day has been!
How bright was the sun,
How lovely and joyful
The course that he run!
Though he rose in a mist,
When his race he began,
And there followed
Some droppings of rain;
But now the fair trav'ler's
Come to the west,
His rays are all gold
And his beauties are best;
He points the sky gay
As he sinks to his rest,
And foretells a bright rising again.

MAY DAY. The sun shone out brilliantly on the morning of the first instant, and groups of happy faces were out at "peep of dawn," and although Flora's gifts were rare as angel's visits, yet young and old enjoyed their early ramble. The weather was much finer than any first of May for several years.

MR. FELT'S CONCERT. There was a goodly gathering at the Town Hall, last Saturday evening, to listen to the "concert of sweet sounds" announced for that occasion. The audience appeared highly delighted with the entertainment, and the whole affair was very creditable to all concerned. We are no musical critic, but we should say no performers more fully meet the expectations of their auditors than did Mr. Felt and his associates, both male and female.

A meeting was called to devise the best means of welcoming and acknowledging the gift which she brought, and a deputation visited the ship and presented Captain Forbes with an address, to which he replied in suitable terms. The deputation then withdrew, having invited Capt. Forbes and officers to a public dinner. This dinner was a splendid affair, attended by the most influential classes, and Capt. F. was the hero of the day.

"Spring time of year has come," and so has the time when people should use every precaution to guard against the diseases incident to the season. One of the best preventatives to a spring sickness, headache, a full heavy feeling about the head and eyes, and with which we ever become acquainted, is the modern process of Champoning. It is essential to health that the head should be kept clean, the pores open, and the hair as nearly as possible in its natural condition, and no operation conduces to these desirable ends more effectually than that of Champoning. It is performed in Boston, in a superior manner, by Messrs. Gardner & Osborne, No. 42 Hanover Street, rear of the American House, and we would strenuously advise all our readers to submit their heads to their manipulations. [See our advertising columns.]

POETRY.

For the Quincy Patriot.
LINES TO MISS
Friend, ye are gone,
And the new morn
Is less bright without your smile!
The voice so clear
That met my ear,
Will thrill through my soul no more!

Ye are very fair!
And when the air
Had rudely fanned thy cheek,
The eye would fain
Return again,
And gaze but to adore!

My heart does beat,
And my blood does leap
Through my veins when I hear thy voice!
Thou from the heart,
And bears a part
Of thy pure spirit's joy!

They call thee cold,
And even bold!
But a spirit pure as thine,
Is a treasure
Beyond measure,
And will last through endless time.

MOVE ON.

All the stars in heaven are moving,
Ever round the bright spheres roving;
Twinkling, beaming, raying, shining,
Blackest night with darkness lining;
Aye revolving through the years,
Playing music of the spheres,
Like the eastern star of old,
Moving towards the shepherd's fold,
Where the wise men—grace to them!
Found the babe of Bethlehem.
God is in each moving star;
God drives on the pleiad car;
Let his will on earth be done
As in heaven the stars move on.
Move on! Keep moving!
Progress is the law of loving.

All the waves of sea are flowing,
As the winds of heaven are blowing;
With a gentle beam-like quiver
Flows the streamlet to the river;
With a stronger waved commotion
Flows the river to the ocean;
While seas' billows eversome
Flow and gain upon the shore—
Wave on wave in never-springing leaping—
Like endeavors never sleeping;
While the pool which moveth never Grows a stagnant bog forever—
White-gilled die its tenant tench,
Green its water, foal its stench,
Wildering marsh-fires o'er it run,
While straight flows the river on.
Move on! Keep moving!
Progress is the law of loving.

Thus within the skies and ocean
Life is married into motion;
Stars revolve, and rivers flow,
And earth? what said Galileo?
When in dungeon damply lying,
Faint and tortured, hardly dying,
Yet for truth, with honest pride,
Yet, 't moves! it moves! he cried.
And the world? its life is motion,
As with stars and as with ocean.
It is moving, it is growing.
All its things are onward flowing;
The hand is moving towards the loaf,
The eye is moving to the roof,
The mind is moving to the book,
The soul lives in a moving loof,
The hand is moving from the sword,
The heart is moving towards the Lord!
Move on! Keep moving!
Progress is the law of loving.

MISCELLANY.

THE LOST MINIATURE.

BY G. P. R. JAMES.

The funeral was over. In a dark room, where for some hours before the body of him who had once owned the house and its surrounding lands, had lain, were now congregated the whole of the relatives of the deceased, who had attended the funeral; and who had, in consequence of a summons issued by the dying man, come to assist at his obsequies—many from a great distance. There were old men and young men, old women and young women: some that were otherwise; but all united in paying but very little reverence to the memory of the departed. Indeed Michel Malines, whose translation from this, to we hope a better world, had drawn so many people from so many places, had, during life, paid so little attention to those united to him by ties of blood, that it was little wonder if, when he was dead, his name should be handed about with but little ceremony. Those who, when alive, have neither served nor benefited mankind, cannot, when dead, expect their consideration.

'Mort de ma vie!' exclaimed a choleric old man, with a soupcion of gout about his thick feet, 'the notary keeps us long waiting—I hope the legacies we shall have, may repay all the trouble we have gone to. Dieu de Dieu!'

'Legacies!' said a peevish old woman by his side, 'legacies, indeed! you are a fool.'

'Thank you, Madame Barbejoie,' replied the old grumbler, 'I take your sentence as complimentary.'

'What a beautiful room for a dance!' whispered a pretty little coquettish brunette, to a tall sheepish looking young man near her.

'Yes,' said the young man, more than half inclined to be horrified at such legerete.

'The dance of death, I suppose,' said Madame Barbejoie, sternly.

'Recollect,' put in a quiet little man, who had hitherto sat in a corner, saying nothing, 'we are at a funeral.'

'Monsieur Barbejoie,' said the peevish woman snappishly, 'we thank you for the information.'

'But the notary,' ventured one anxious to prevent anything like a scene.

'Aye the notary; I wonder what he is at?' exclaimed another: 'I confess I am curious to know.'

'Making the will; I hope not his own,' said the first speaker, in a manner that left the impression that he had said a good thing; at least in his own estimation.

'Drinking cau sucre, to soften his voice,' quoth another. 'I fancy he'll want it.'

'Confessing his sins, rather,' exclaimed Madame Barbejoie, testily.

'Notaries never confess, except on the rack,' again observed M. Laurent, the gouty man.

'Silence in the pit!' said some unknown voice, 'here is the notary. Chut! chut!'

In truth the man of law entered the funeral apartment at this particular moment. He was a young, and even handsome man, with a mild, gentle, benignant cast of countenance, which rather took the company assembled, especially the ladies, by surprise. But he was not alone. After him came a calm, sedate, quiet looking priest, leading by the hand a little boy. Never was a greater contrast presented, than by these two.

The priest was a Jesuit, though not openly attached to the order, and had been the deceased's most intimate friend, adviser, and director. In early youth Michel Malines was reputed a great sinner; the greatest reason that in his old age he should be a great saint. Extremes meet; and a once very wicked old fellow, to the world, a very worthy individual.

The boy, a fine openfaced, handsome lad of about ten years of age, was the deceased's only child. He alone, of all those present, wept; for he had lost a father.

The company simultaneously rose as Monsieur Durant entered, thus accompanied.

'Many excuses for having kept you waiting, ladies and gentlemen,' said the lawyer mildly; but this dear child, whose presence is necessary to the reading of the will, is so devoured by grief, I had the greatest difficulty in bringing him hither at all.'

'The dear child, indeed, indeed!' said Madame Barbejoie. 'Little wretch of a boy!' she whispered.

'No excuse, pray,' exclaimed M. Laurent.

'Your presence now is ample compensation for a longer absence,' said the coquette.

M. Durant, without noticing these remarks, seated himself, in which the company imitated him. For once they were unanimous.

'Come near me, Paul,' said the Jesuit meekly, 'and listen to what thy father decided concerning thee.'

Paul replied only by sobs. The notary broke the seal of the packet, which he now exhibited. After the usual preliminaries, the testament of the deceased was as follows:

'To Monsieur Laurent, a gouty, disagreeable old bachelor, who, when I was a young man, refused to lend me a five franc piece, I leave—nothing.'

Up rose the testy invalid and left the room without a word. The man of parchment continued: 'To Madame Barbejoie, a selfish and ugly old woman, I bequeath—my blessing.'

'Pierre! Pierre!' exclaimed the elderly female thus irreverently addressed, 'give me your arm, and let us leave this den of insolence and falsehood!'

'Stay,' said the notary, who could scarcely refrain from smiling—stay, Monsieur Barbejoie, your name occurs, also.'

'Some fresh impertinence, I dare say,' continued the wife furiously. 'I insist on your coming away, Pierre.'

Still, as the dame moved not, the easy and obedient husband did not attempt to stir.

'To Monsieur Barbejoie, a quiet and good natured man, whose only fault is being tied to his wife's apron strings—'

'Oh, Pierre, why don't you knock him down?'

'And not daring to say a word for himself—in consideration of the happy days we spent together in times gone by—I leave four thousand francs.'

Little Pierre opened his eyes with astonishment, while Madame, his wife, allowing her visage to relax into a smile, as much as to say, 'There is some use, after all, in having a husband,' again seated herself.

'To Elanore Maline, my niece, I leave—the coquette who was now referred to, breathed with difficulty. Her fate hung upon a thread. She was poor; and though thoughtless and giddy, was at bottom possessed of a good heart. The young man at her side was her lover; but being well enough off, and she worth nothing, his parents forbade the union. Her anxiety may easily be imagined—my advice—that she leave off seeking for vain admirers and get married.'

The poor girl turned deadly pale, and appeared ready to faint. Her heavy, sleepy looking lover himself appeared deeply moved. Never judge from outside; for this stupid looking youth was a rough diamond. He was all heart, but he knew not how to give utterance to his feelings, which is often the misfortune of young men, who have not seen the world.

'And in order to enable her to do so with propriety, and where her heart is set, I further bequeath to her ten thousand francs.'

Whatever were the sensations of those around, there were two in the room whom the strange old man had made thoroughly happy. It was his intention so to do, for Michel had remembered the days of his youth.

'These are all my legacies. The rest of my property, in houses, lands and money, amounting to about two hundred thousand francs, I bequeath to Monsieur Foveau, the cure of our parish—'

An universal movement of surprise took place while the priest moved not a muscle, and the child who had not listened to a word, continued to weep. Paul was utterly unconscious of what was going forward.

'In trust to be applied, when my dear son attains the age of twenty-one in the following manner—'

'The property to be divided into two parts—such part as the said Reverend Pere Foveau chooses, to go to my son, and the other to be devoted to the holy services of the church.'

My son, in the mean time, to be educated by the said Reverend Pere Foveau, who, dying, whatever name he thinks fit, to be substituted in lieu of his own.'

As the worthy attorney read the clause deliberate and slowly, a faint flush crossed his face, while his dark eyes were keenly fixed upon the priest. The latter, however, moved not a muscle, nor did his manners show the slightest sign of emotion; and Monsieur Durant having at length concluded, closed the paper with a sigh. The cautious lawyer foresaw difficulties he knew not how to obviate.

The company now dispersed, the relatives departed—while the cure went out to give some orders to the servants.

The lawyer and the orphan remained alone in the chamber of death.

'Paul,' said the former, kindly, taking the boy's hand, 'do you love me?'

'I do, Monsieur Durant,' replied the sobbing child, 'but oh, Monsieur Durant, what have they done with my father? I shall never see him again!'

'My dear Paul, God is good, and will one day unite you to your father once more. But in the meantime, you will promise me one thing? You will be taken from here until you are twenty-one; when you reach that age you will be free; now promise me—you will then come to me, will you not, and I will be your friend. You promise me?'

'I do,' sobbed the child.

'Now do not forget this promise; for,' continued the lawyer, solemnly, 'you will then indeed want a friend.'

This scene, as above described, occurred in a village near Paris, some two hundred and odd years ago.

More than ten years passed, and Paul Melines grew to man's estate. During the whole of this period he was under the tuition of Pere Foveau, though not in the village where his father had died and been interred; for shortly after this sad occurrence, the priest removed with his charge to Paris, where he steadily devoted himself to the lad's education, except his duty called him to attend to the service of his order. The worthy man, now an abbe, originally wished to bring the boy up for the church; but as Paul exhibited the most intense opposition to this idea, vowing that the army alone was the profession that he loved, it was thought unwise to baulk his desires.

It was the day previous to that on which he became of age, that we again introduce Paul upon the scene of action. He was in his own private room, the house being occupied by various persons, and the priest dwelling in a little garret apart from all else.

Books, papers, a huge escritoire, manuscripts, scattered over the floor, ill-assorted with swords, daggers, and suits of armor, that lay in hopeless confusion in every corner, while by a lamp sat Paul, holding in his hand a small miniature of a woman, painted by one of the most fashionable artists of the day. This face was gentle, mild and lovely, while the innocence of early youth was stamped on every feature.

'I have seen that countenance before,' said Paul, gazing intently on it—'or is it the realization of a dream?'

'How came you by it my son?' inquired the priest, mildly, having entered so gently as to be unheeded.

'I found it, father,' replied Paul, blushing and laying down the picture, 'this morning near the church.'

'Some court beauty, perchance,' continued Pere Foveau quietly, 'but that is not what I come to speak about.'

'Of what then, father?' replied Paul.

'To-morrow,' said the Jesuit, seating himself, and allowing a faint blush to illumine his features, 'you are of age.'

'I am, father,' and it was a dim perception of the joys the future might bring him, which influenced the warmth of his reply.

'You know the terms of your father's will?'

'That I am to have such a part as you choose, and the rest to go to the church.'

'Exactly. Now, I have taken advice in high quarters, my son, as to what I should do, and acting upon that principle they decided I ought to act upon—I will not say his holiness himself has not guided me—this is my decision. I have educated you with care; you have been bred to the profession of arms; you are ready for any employment, and I have no doubt will obtain that eminence which your talents deserve; in consideration of the great good which may then accrue to the church, I give to you one thousand francs and my blessing, while I give to the holy apostolic church, one hundred and ninety-nine thousand francs forever.'

'Infamous robber!' exclaimed the young man, thus plunged from lofty visions of wealth and independence, to struggle for existence, 'is it thus that you betray my father's trust?'

'My son you are impetrate,' said the priest mildly. 'Your father's trust has not been betrayed. He says distinctly that part we choose, we are to give you; and we are to choose from loftier motives than you can scan, to give you what I have said.'

Paul replied not, but bending his head until it rested on the table, covered his eyes with his hands, and remained thus for some minutes.

'False priest!' he began.

But the Jesuit was gone, and on the table was a copy of his father's will, and the thousand francs.

'Courage!' said Paul to himself. 'I am young, I have a profession, and a glorious one—let me lay out my plans.'

A few days, and Paul Malines, on foot, with a haversack on his back, was discovered leaving Paris by the road which led to his own native village. Wrapped in serious thought, but not giving way to melancholy, the young disinherited walked along with a firm and manly step.

Two days Paul continued his journey, and on the morning of the third found himself within a few miles of his birth place. Two of these had been gone over, when he came in view of the only town which he had to pass on his route, nearly all being some distance from the summit of a lofty hill, down which the pathway he had chosen wound slowly and lengthily.

Stepping out firmly, he entered the town, and advancing rapidly through the principal street hurried on his way. He had crossed the greater portion of the space which intervened between the gates of the city, when turning suddenly the corner of the rue Monferney, his eyes caught sight of a picture which transfixed him with astonishment. At a window, and that too of a large and magnificent house, standing as if in the enjoyment of the fresh air, was the original of the miniature which Paul treasured so highly. But such an original!—far more beautiful than anything he could have imagined from the picture. To say that Paul acted under the impulse of surprise, would be faintly to express the look with which he gazed upon the lovely apparition, who, offended or astonished, or acting with coquettish calculation, immediately retired from the window.

Paul heaved a deep sigh, but a sigh of a man who was relieved of a heavy load.

'I have found her!' he exclaimed half aloud.

'I have found her—she who I have dreamed—she whom I love already.'

And forgetting the tremendous obstacles which lay between him and success, gave himself up to the dreamy bliss of young first love. The next minute he was at the door, and in another in the presence of the servant of the house.

'I wish to see your mistress.'

The servant looked at the dusty person of the young wayfarer and hesitated.

'I say I wish to see your young mistress, repeat Paul mildly but firmly.'

There was something in the tones of our hero which went to the soubrette's heart, and with a smile, she inquired the stranger's name.

'Monsieur Paul Malines.'

In two minutes more, Paul was received in a magnificent apartment, by two females, the one evidently the mother; the other a daughter. The former spoke.

'What can I do for Monsieur,' said she, 'is it any professional business?'

'No Madame,' replied Paul, blushing and hesitating, 'but have you not lost a portrait?'

'Ah, Monsieur!' exclaimed the mother, while an expression of deep gratification illumined the features of the young girl, 'you have not found it?'

'Indeed, Madame, I am happy to say I have.'

'And how have you been fortunate enough to find it? How can we thank you?'

'I saw Mademoiselle at the window.'

'Indeed,' said the mother fixing a scrutinizing glance upon the dusty youth, 'you knew not where it was?'

The daughter said nothing, but a strange feeling flew to her heart. How that strange young man must have studied the miniature!

'I found it,' continued Paul at the church of St. Esprit, in Paris, some days since, and have carried it with me ever since in the faint hope of finding an owner for it—I have—'

Paul paused, trembled and said no more, while his whole face was suffused with crimson.

'I have it next my heart,' he was about to have said, but an indefinite impulse stayed his words, while he drew it from his bosom, his features still more overcome by burning blushes—blushes that with his manner spoke volumes to the heart of the fair owner.

Both ladies were about to join in thanking the young traveller, when the door opened and a man entered hurriedly.

It was the notary Durant.

'Paul Malines, my dear boy,' he exclaimed, 'most delighted to see you. You have then kept your promise. I am glad of it.'

Paul stammered forth some unintelligible words, that Louise the lovely original of the picture which Paul had parted with, most willingly came to his aid, and explained the whole in a few words. Durant listened attentively, and a gratified smile played round his lips.

QUINCY PATRIOT.

CRANBERRIES ON UPLANDS. A Burnham states in the Massachusetts Ploughman, that he set out cranberries from the swamps, on good corn ground of a loamy character, in hills to admit the cultivator, and clean hoeing. A part had six inches square of muck on the roots, and others none; both did equally well. The transplanting was done early in spring; they bloomed about midsummer and bore fruit the same year. "The fruit," he states, "is large and handsome, many of the hills yielding a pint of berries."

THE MEXICAN WAR.

The expected battle between Gen. Scott and his troops and Santa Anna and the Mexicans, has been fought, and resulted in a most triumphant victory on the part of the Americans. It took place at the pass of Cerro Gordo where the Mexican army was posted, and from its position, fortifications and outposts, together with the natural defences of broken grounds and steep hills, rocks and clappars, it seemed as impregnable as Gibraltar. The attack was commenced by the Americans on the 17th ult, led on by Gen. Twiggs, having in his command regulars and volunteers.

On the morning of the 18th, the action was renewed by the Americans, and terminated at four o'clock by a most complete victory over the Mexicans—whose works one after another were taken, though obstinately defended, five of their generals, and many colonels and other officers, together with three thousand men, and the rest of their army driven and routed, with the loss of every thing, ammunition, cannon, baggage train, Santa Anna's massive plate, papers, money, and his coach with his wooden leg in it—for he escaped by cutting his saddle mule from the harness and mounting him took to the clappars. Could our dragoons have found a practical road to the rear, Santa Anna must have been captured. The prisoners who would accept it, were released on their paroles not to serve against the Americans during the war, but Gen. Vega (who was again taken fighting gallantly) and other officers, remaining as prisoners, gave their parole to report themselves to the commandant at Vera Cruz. American loss in killed and wounded was about five hundred, the Mexicans about the same. The number of Americans engaged twelve thousand, Mexicans fifteen thousand. Gen. Twiggs pursued the enemy to within four miles of Jalapa, when there was none to pursue.

On the morning of the 9th, Gen. Worth's division left the camp for the city of Mexico, to be followed at noon by Gen. Scott, with the main body of the army.

SOUTH SHORE RAILROAD. The subscription books for the stock of this road have been opened, says the Plymouth Memorial, and vigorous efforts are being made by the friends of the amended charter to obtain the necessary amount. About seventy thousand dollars was subscribed in Weymouth and Braintree. The amount reported to have been subscribed and promised on the line, was about one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, including the Weymouth and Braintree subscriptions; leaving about seventy-five thousand dollars to be obtained. The work is to be commenced when one hundred and seventy five thousand dollars is subscribed.

NEWSPAPER CHANGES. The Independent Democrat, the New Hampshire Courier and the Granite Freeman, at Concord, New Hampshire, are to be combined in one printing establishment, and the New Hampshire Patriot and Hill's New Hampshire Patriot are to be united in the same manner.

PARDONED. Capt. Peter Flowery, who has been confined in Salem jail, (Mass.) for about two years, under sentence for having been concerned in the slave trade, has been pardoned by the President, and released by the United States Marshal.

JUDGE OF THE COURT OF COMMON PLEAS. The Governor of this Commonwealth has nominated Charles E. Forbes, Esq. of Northampton, as Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, in place of Judge Colby, whose resignation takes effect on the first of July next.

PLANK ROADS. The following information is from Hunt's Merchants' Magazine for April:— "Plank roads originated in Canada. The first was finished in 1839. Since then several have been made in the United States. Charters for three roads in New York have been obtained. The plank of the Canada roads has endured eight years. Fourteen applications are made to the Legislature of New York the present session; four of them for roads to go from the city of Rochester."

GEN. TAYLOR'S APPEARANCE. A correspondent of a Philadelphia paper, thus describes old "Rough and Ready":

The General is not over five feet seven or eight inches high, is stout, and inclines to corpulency, would weigh, I should think, near two hundred pounds, and the most prominent thing about him is an unusual shortness of legs. When he is sitting he looks like a tall man—not so when standing. His face is intelligent, and it is usually lit up with a benevolent smile. He is in the habit, when speaking to any one, of partially closing his left eye. His hair is gray and grizzled. In one word, gentlemen, if you can imagine a plain, old farmer, who has a farm paid for worth five thousand dollars, and nothing else in the world—an independent, jovial, dent-care-a-fig, kind of an old coon—you have "old Zach" before you.

PUNISHMENT OF DEATH. Amongst the Esquimaux, according to Sir John Ross, the crime of murder very rarely occurs. When it does, the murderer's punishment consists in being banished to perpetual solitude, to be shunned by every individual of his tribe; inasmuch that even the sight of him is avoided by all who may inadvertently meet him. On being asked why his life is not taken in return it was replied, "that this would be to make themselves equally bad; that the loss of his life would not restore the other; and that he who should commit such an act would be equally guilty."

THE SEASON. The time of the blossoming of fruit trees, is a tolerably good indication of the character of the season of spring, says the Boston Journal. A large apricot tree, which has been carefully watched for some years, commenced blossoming during several seasons, as follows:—In 1844, April 17, 1845, April 24, 1846, April 19, and 1847, May 1. It will thus be seen that the present season is a week later than in 1845—and a fortnight later than in 1844.

OLD COLONY RAILROAD. The weekly receipts on this road, we learn from the Old Colony Memorial, show a very handsome increase of business over last year. The stock, which for a long time stood in the market at ninety-nine and a fraction, went up to par recently, and has since reached one hundred and one and a half. The wooden part of the new depot in Boston, three hundred and ten feet in length, is nearly finished. A temporary ticket office is prepared, and it is expected the trains will commence running into the new station next week. The foundations of the brick building are nearly completed, and the walls will be carried up as expeditiously as possible.

EXPORTS FROM THE UNITED STATES. It is ascertained, by positive returns from our custom house, that there have been exported from the United States from the first of Sept. last to the tenth of this month, 1,321,000 lbs. of flour, 315,000 lbs. of Indian corn. These few articles alone would amount at their shipping prices, to nearly twenty millions of dollars.

LOUR. The Monroe (Mich.) Advocate says there are now in store at that place, awaiting shipment, 76,000 lbs. of flour, and as many bushels of wheat, besides ashes, hides and other articles. The amount of freight in the interior is such as to furnish the Southern Rail Road Company, with their seventy cars, full and constant business until the next harvest.

LICENSES. The Mayor and Aldermen of Boston have decided against granting licenses for the sale of spirituous liquors. The Board of Aldermen were tied in their vote, and the Mayor gave the casting vote against licensing.

DO NOT NEGLECT. Of the one hundred and twenty-five dollars which we wanted on the eighth of the present month, short of twenty-five dollars has been as yet paid us. We have put off our creditors who are pressing for their claims, until Tuesday next, and hereby remind those indebted for years, unless they pay before Monday night ensuring their accounts will be placed in the hands of a gentleman well versed in legal matters for him to exercise his skill and patience.

TO J. CLAPP EDWARDS we have committed bills for collection, who will make friendly calls in season for the specified time, and we hope a helping hand will be extended to us in his collecting one hundred dollars by next Monday night.

POETRY.

TIME'S PORTRAIT.

Time—point me time; he with the snowy hair,
The wrinkled brow, the hour-glass, and the scythe;
Trees bending o'er him, but with branches bare,— Wings on his shoulders—hoary, yet not lithe
Like those that seraph wear; broad pinions, strong
And free—upbearing, yet not hasty—face,
To which the mind of worlds seems to belong,
Yet naught akin to gaiety or grace—
So point me Time!

And yet not thus, not always thus he seems
The stern destroyer;—in a milder form
Often he comes: point him 'midst broken dreams,
With nothing of the pestilence or storm;
No weapon in his hand—the hand itself
Laid on the lordly hall, the lowly cot,
The beauty's roses, and the miser's pelf,
And "brothered on his robe the word "forgot,"
So point me Time!

Yet hath he other seemings. In his hand
The sword of justice and the poisoned pang,
Remorse and conscience drag; a flaming brand,
A chalice that the unrighteous shall drink up.
Thus point me Time, the avenger; on his brow
A crown of stars, with red and angry light,
Searching like eyes the sinner's conscience now,
Smiling his spirit with a deadly blight—
So point me Time!

Another aspect. With a golden key
He stands, the keeper of life's mighty past,
The treasure house of deathless memory;
And ever grow its stores more strange and vast.
Jewels of thought, dreams half-dissolved in air,
Love, hope, and transport—all the joys of youth,
And sins of age, are duly garnered there,
And registered within the book of truth—
So point me Time!

And yet once more and in a lovelier form,
Call him the perfecter; his hand can close
The gate whence issues the devouring storm,
And yet unfold the petals of the rose;
And as the tutor of the human soul,
Opening its pathway o'er life's troubled sea,
Unto the shelter of its mighty goal,
The wide-spread portal of eternity—
So point me time!

A MORNING CAROL.

Open the casement, and up, with the sun!
His gallant journey has now begun;
Over the hills his chariot is rolled,
Bannered with glory and burnished with gold,
Over the hills he comes sublime,
Bridgeman of earth, and brother of time!

Day has broken, joyous and fair,
Fragrant and fresh is the morning air,
Beauteous and bright are those orient hues,
Balmy and sweet those morning dews,
Oh, there is health, and wealth, and bliss,
In dawning nature's motherly kiss!

Lo, the wondering world awakes,
With its rosy-tipped mountains and gleaming lakes,
With its fields and cities, its deserts and trees,
Its calm old cliffs and sounding seas,
In their gratitude blessing him,
Who dwelleth between the cherubim.

Break away boldly from sleep's leaden chain,
Seek not to forge that fetter again;
Rise with vigor and resolute nerve,
Up, to bless man, and your Master to serve,
Thankful and hopeful, and happy to raise
The offering of prayer, and the incense of praise.

STANZAS.

Friendship and Love are gifts from God,
Bestowed upon mankind awhile,
To cheer us on life's thorny road;
He formed sweet Love and Friendship's smile.

Oh, what a dark and dismal wild
Is life, without Love's soothing balm
To make our ruffling passions mild,
And all our griefs and sorrows calm.

'Tis hard to think all nature's ties
Death's cruel power will destroy;
We must believe in Paradise
To meet our friends, will add great joy.

And if on earth we wander far
From beings that we deeply love,
Sweet hope, that loved, propitious star,
Says, we shall meet them all above.

ANECDOTES.

"A little more animation, my dear," whispered Mrs. B. to the gentle Susan, who was walking languidly through a quadrille, at a party.
"Do leave me to manage my own business, mamma," replied the prudent nymph; "I shall not dance my ringlets out of curl for a married man."
"Of course not, my love; but I was not aware of your partner was."

The Debating Society of Spring Garden, recently, after a very animated discussion on the question "whether a 'gal' has a right to say NO before she is asked," decided, by nearly a unanimous vote, that "she hasn't."

A conceited divine being asked by a student how he might acquire confidence in preaching, gave him the following method:
"My father had a fine field of cabbage, and I made a practice of going into it, to repeat a discourse, fancying every cabbage-head a man."
"And now," said the witty student, "I should think, from your sermon, you fancied every man a cabbage-head."

A man took off his coat to show a terrible wound he had received some years past. "Oh!" said he, recollecting himself, on not being able to find it, "I remember now, 'twas my brother Bill's arm."

Gilbert Stuart, the celebrated portrait painter, once met a lady in the street, who saluted him with—"Ah, Mr. Stuart, I have just seen your miniature, and kissed it because it was so much like you." "And did it kiss you in return?" "Why, no." "Then," said Stuart, "it was not like me."

MISCELLANY.

AN UNWELCOME GUEST.

During the winter of 1777, New York, Long and Staten Island, were in quiet possession of the British army, and the season for active operations not having arrived they lived a life of dull inactivity. Marauding parties were, however, frequently sent over into New Jersey, committing many outrages and making heavy levies upon the "Rebel" population.

Nat Randolph, or as the name was at that time usually pronounced, "Randall," was a "Rebel" of gallant daring, and of the Jersey blood. From his earliest youth he lived on the rising ground, but a short distance from Kill Van Kull Sound, near Woodbridge Creek. He had hunted over every acre within many miles of his natal spot, and fished in every stream, and had acquired an intimate knowledge of every by-path and each nook and corner of the whole country. The British had, in some of their foraging excursions, driven off his father's cattle, and had shown a peculiar hatred to all of the name in that region, because of their well known support of the Republican cause. Nat had not a whit more love for the enemies of his country, than they had shown for him, and often had he and his companions vowed vengeance, and many a time had the British forces felt his power without suspecting whence came the blow.

During the winter, whilst hostilities were partially suspended on account of the severity of the weather, the British officers gave a ball at a small inn near Richmond. Brigadier General Bird, with his suite, succeeded in gathering together about a score of lasses, who, though they were by no means friendly to the cause of the invader, did not object to a little harmless amusement which would serve to beguile the weary hours of a long winter's eve, and afford them an opportunity of displaying their rustic charms, and flirting with the gallily dressed officers. A couple of fiddles, played upon (or rather tortured,) by two colored gentlemen, were put in requisition, and all exerted themselves to the utmost to render themselves and each other merry.

The door of the largest room stood invitingly open for the benefit of the good country people who wished to feast their eyes upon gold lace, and the dashing scarlet uniforms. Many had come, gazed for a few minutes, satisfied themselves and retired. Among others came a stout, well built, plain looking man, wrapped up in a coarse great coat, who stood for a time leaning against the door post, and at length, at the urgent solicitations of the officers, who intended to make sport of him for their particular gratification, was induced to enter and seat himself quietly in a corner.

The English officers, in a strain of arrogant boasting, were recounting their deeds of chivalry, performed during their several late excursions. Many was the bitter curse gratuitously bestowed upon one Nat Randall, who had been the means of spoiling so much good sport for them, and appeared to be cordially hated by all the officers present. Finally Gen. Bird said to one of his aids, a fine looking, but dandified young officer, "I'd give one hundred pounds to catch that fellow; he is always crossing our path and has given us a good deal of trouble; if I could once get hold of him, his neck and a hempen halter would be likely to form an intimate acquaintance."

Several swore they would soon relieve his Excellency's pocket of the trifling amount, by bringing in the "cursed rebel." The reward was a tempting one and caused the utterance of fearful threats, and called forth many a malediction, and numberless anathemas against the unoffending Rebel. Profanity was at that time almost universally recognized as an essential part of the military education, and the Staten Island lasses could bear ample testimony of the unquestioned familiarity of the British officers with that branch of military science.

The coated stranger kept his seat during the whole conversation, and just as the contra-dance was ended, he slowly arose and assumed his former position at the door. Another dance was called for, and as the gay officers were moving round the room in search of their fair partners, the stranger unfolded his arms, and in a solemn voice, said: "General, I'd like to speak a word or two in your ear."

The General wondered what could be the import of the communication he wished to make, but he approached him, and politely asked him what he had to say to him. "Nothing, sir," replied the stranger, laying his hand upon the General's shoulder, "only I'm Nat Randall and you are my prisoner!" The officers flew at once to recover their side arms, of which they had divested themselves at the commencement of the dance; but Nat resumed in an authoritative tone: "Tis useless to resist, the house is surrounded, and if you make the least resistance I have men enough to cut you in pieces." At the same time opening his coat and displaying a brace of savage looking pistols, and a gleaming hunting knife, he gave a shrill whistle, which was answered from without by the sound of voices, and the clanking of muskets, which somewhat damped the courage of the salutory soldiers, and admonished them that their best policy would be submission.

"Lay down your arms at once!" thundered Nat, and they were brought and placed in a heap at his feet—and on the instant, nine faithful brother rebels rushed in and took the party prisoners, the country girls at the same time securing their arms. The British were more than double the number of the Patriots, but this they discovered too late, and being deprived of their arms, were obliged to submit.

Now a few words of explanation as to how Nat received intelligence of the dance, and of the number of officers, etc. to be present, and how he was enabled to lay his plans for their capture.

A silly, half-witted fellow, named Joe Reckhow, a Staten Islander, who liked Nat for his many good qualities, was allowed, on account of his lack of brains, to come and go when he pleased; and the English officers regarding him as a natural fool, often spoke very freely before him. He had chanced to meet Nat the day previous to the dance, and advised Nat to conceal himself, as his life was in danger. Nat told him he did not care a fig for the whole British army, and by his ingenious questions, drew out of him all the particulars of the intended dance, and the names and number of the officers who were to form the party.

At that period, when every one was a soldier, it was a matter of no great difficulty to get together a few men, who delighted in a bold and daring, or even a fool-hardy enterprise. The thought of personal danger never crossed their minds, and every other consideration was lost sight of in the sincere desire of serving their beloved country, at all hazards.

If, through carelessness, or imagined security, the British allowed themselves to be thrown, even for a moment, off their guard, some brave fellow, "fighting on his own hook," was almost certain to discover the weak point—and, collecting his neighbors, they were, either by means of stratagem, or their impetuous and unexpected attacks, invariably successful in their undertakings.

Nat had arranged his plans admirably, and was, as has been shown, successful. Joe Reckhow followed Nat and his party down to the boats in which they had crossed the sound, and mechanically assisted in their embarkation. Nat took good care of his prisoners, watching them very strictly, but acted towards them far more humanely than they would have done had he been a prisoner in their hands. They were eventually exchanged for officers of equal rank; and Nat continued to fight upon the side of liberty until the close of the war.

A FIX.

While passing through Wilson Lane a few days since, says the Albany Knickerbocker, we saw a large black turtle, "dragging his slow length along" on the side-walk, and quite a crowd had gathered to look at the "creature."

Soon a dumpy little negro man who had just come with a very small dog, looked at the turtle with apparent astonishment for a moment and asked:

"What what do you call dat 'ar feller?"

"That's a turtle," answered a bystander.

"Gorry! what dey do wid 'um?"

"Make soup of him!"

"Soup!—yah!—what a looking feller dat is to make soup of!—Heah, Cesar, bite 'im!"

said the negro to his dog, as he stirred up the turtle with his cane.

The dog seemed to know a little more about the "nature of the baste" than did his master, lunged back a little, but finally he crawled up to get a smell of the strange customer, when the turtle made a dive at his foot, and seizing it in his mouth, squeezed it so unmercifully that the puppy got up some of the tallest kind of yelling, and the negro made no less noise than the dog.

"Ki'bi—ow—ow," yelled the dog, while his master puffed like a locomotive, exclaiming:

"Gorry mighty!—you brack-load, why you not let dat 'ar dog foot?"

And after thrashing him lustily over the shell with a sugar-cane stick, until he had broken his weapon to splinters, he seized the turtle by the head, and attempted to force him to release his hold of the dog. Unfortunately Cuffy got his thumb into the trap, with the dog's foot, and then there was music! Finally the 'bark slipped' from the negro's thumb, and he extended the area of freedom to such a distance, that there was no danger of his being harmed by the turtle, which with 'adhesiveness 17' still clung to the dog, and it was with considerable difficulty that his jaws could be opened sufficiently wide to 'render unto Cesar' that which was Cesar's. The puppy was no sooner at liberty than Cuffy sang out:

"Heah Cesar come way from dar! and if dat d—d hasty plate of soup get our finger in him mouf agin, he may bite till him toof ache; dar's all I's got to say 'bout em!"

The negro 'put' and his dog hobbled after him on three legs, leaving a crowd of spectators, who were shaking their sides with laughter.

A YANKEE GHOST.

Guilt or remorse, for injuries inflicted upon those whose forgiveness cannot be known, and whose power of retaliation in their new condition cannot be estimated, is the prolific mother of spectral annoyances. Whomsoever we have injured, however despicable and weak while living, becomes formidable by death. I have noticed in our thrifty, money-loving community, there is a very common notion, that the disposal of an estate, contrary to the known wishes of the testator, is the most potent spell, of all others, for raising Yankee ghosts. Among the many anecdotes which corroborate this opinion I must content myself with citing one.

Some years ago, an elderly woman, familiarly known as "Aunt Morse," died, leaving a handsome little property. No will was found although it was understood before her decease that such a document was in the hands of Squire S., one of her neighbors. One cold winter evening, some weeks after her departure, Squire S. sat in his parlor, looking over his papers, when, hearing some one cough in a familiar way, he looked up, and saw before him a little crooked old woman, in an oil-colored woollen frock, blue and white tow and linen apron, and striped blanket, leaning her sharp, pinched face on one hand, while the other supported a short black tobacco pipe, at which she was puffing in the most vehement and spiteful manner conceivable.

The Squire was a man of some nerve, but his first thought was to attempt to escape, from which he was deterred only by the consideration that any effort to that effect would necessarily bring him nearer to his unwelcome visitor.

"Aunt Morse," he said, at length, "for the Lord's sake get back to the burying-ground! What on earth are you here for?"

The apparition took her pipe deliberately from her mouth, and informed him that she came to see justice done with her will; and that nobody need think of cheating her, dead or alive. Concluding her remark with a shrill emphasis, she replaced her pipe, and puffed away with renewed vigor. The Squire had reasons for retaining the document at issue, which he had supposed conclusive, but he had not reckoned upon the interference of the testator in the matter. Aunt Morse, when living he had always regarded as a very shrew of a woman, and he now began to suspect that her recent change of condition had improved her, like Sheridan's ghost, "the wrong way." He saw nothing better to be done, under the circumstances, than to promise to see to it that very evening.

The ghost nodded her head approvingly, and, knocking the ashes out of her pipe against the chimney, proceeded to fill it anew with a handful of tobacco from her side pocket. "And now, Squire," said she, "if you'll just light my pipe for me, I'll be a-going."

The Squire was, as has been intimated, no coward; he had been out during the war in a Merriam privateer, and had seen sharp work off Fayall, but, as he said afterwards, "it was no touch to lighting Aunt Morse's pipe."

No slave of a pipe-bearer ever handed the chibque to the Grand Turk with more care and reverence, than the Squire manifested on this occasion. Aunt Morse drew two or three long preliminary whiffs, to see that all was right, pulled her blanket over her head, and slowly hobbled out at the door. The Squire being true to his promise, was never again disturbed. It is right, in conclusion, to say that there were suspicions, at the time, that the ghost was a reality of flesh and blood—in short, one of the living heirs of Aunt Morse, and not the old lady herself.—Whittier's Supernaturalism of New England.

WHAT DO WE LIVE FOR?

The great object of social existence, says the North American Review, is for each to raise himself to a position where he can be as lazy and good for nothing as he pleases.

This is eminently true. Every one is striving to get so as to live without working for his subsistence. Work is looked upon as an evil, which all wish to escape—idleness as a blessing worthy to be striven for with the utmost effort. Such, at least, is the natural conclusion of those who look upon society as it is. By common consent such are in a condition to live without labor are considered the most happy. And the strife for wealth—the struggle to amass fortunes, seems to be only for the purpose of gaining that very position.

And yet every one who candidly thinks upon the subject, must acknowledge that those who labor, either with the hand or head, are the more worthy class. Labor is necessary to produce every thing—those therefore who do no work, add nothing to the common stock of the world's wealth. And too, labor and happiness go hand in hand. To work is the law of nature—there is nothing idle in the universe—except man.

There is a much higher object in life than merely to gain a position where we may be as idle as we please. When affluence brings no better boon, it is a questionable blessing. But when it is made the means of personal improvement, intellectual culture, moral advancement, social happiness—when the higher nature of man is developed thereby, it is a blessing worth while the winning.

But too little time and means are turned towards these objects. We are in too much of a hurry to get rich, without stopping to inquire why we wish to become so. We enjoy less real happiness than we might. Men toil from the rising to the setting sun, and scarcely pause to take that repose nature demands. We do not enjoy the present for fear there is something in the future that may escape us. We never are but always to be lusted. With us it is never today—we are pressing forward for to-morrow.

All this bustle and strife are well enough if we did not stop here. The evil is, that we stop short of what we might attain. Our leisure from toil is an idle leisure. We work too much; but even when not working we are too much in the habit of squandering our time. This is too true of young men. Relaxation is of course required, but it is not the relaxation of mere idleness. The spare moments should be improved.

It is of no account to rail at our social system and charge all existing evils in the world upon that. Let every one improve himself and there will be no such great need of the improvement of society—or rather that will renovate society. The wrong in the world is traceable to individual agency, and when men learn to feel this as they should, half the battle will be won. It is time men learned that it is no excuse to do evil because their neighbors set the example. Greater independence would lead to greater happiness generally and individually.

ADVANTAGES OF A CALAMITY.

We read a capital story in a French paper, respecting the advantages of a calamity. The narrative was very verbose, and so we will tell the tale in as few words as possible. A widow lady was living near Lyons, at the period of the inundation of the Rhone. She was young and beautiful, and had just accepted the hand of an old fellow of fifty-five of sixty, who passed himself off as a spruce bachelor in the prime of life. They passed a certain evening together in social chat, talking over their union, which was to take place the next day. Mr. Leonard, the bridegroom that was to be, finally took leave, and retired for the night. He lodged on the second floor. He had made some progress in preparing for a repose, when a violent commotion was heard and Mrs. Danville, the widow, burst into his room.

"What is the matter?" exclaimed the beau.

"Oh! mon Dieu!" exclaimed the lady, "the river has risen and inundated my apartments and I am forced to ascend to yours for shelter." Here she paused, and uttered a wild shriek; for, on looking around her, she beheld a glossy black wig hanging on the back of a chair, while the bald pate of her lover glistened in the lamp light. She thought his voice sounded strangely, and, on looking on the dressing table, the "cigars" was explained by the appearance of a fine set of teeth. But she had no time for explanations, for the river was still rising, and finally came up to the second story windows. Mr. Leonard opened a window and roared for help. A boatman pulled to his assistance.

"Can you take a couple of passengers?" said he.

"There's only room for one," replied the boatman.

"Then here goes," cried the affrighted lover, and he jumped into the boat and left the widow to her fate.

The latter rushed up stairs, and entered an apartment on the third floor—it was occupied by a handsome painter, who started on seeing her.

"You here, madam?" he exclaimed, "I thought you had saved yourself, else I should have risked my life for yours."

"But tell me," said the lady, "who painted that picture on the easel?"

"Pardon my daring, madam," answered the painter, "it is an attempt at your portrait. I have labored on it in secret, and with ardor, for my soul was in it. It was a labor of love."

"Yes, lady, at this dreadful moment, I may speak out and confess that I love you, though another claims your hand?"

"He is unworthy of me—I have cast him off forever."

"Then you pardon my boldness in painting your portrait."

"If you like it, the original is at your service."

We need not say that the offer was accepted. In the meantime the flood subsided; and although in the morning Mr. Leonard came back in a canoe to claim his bride, with two spruce watermen to carry him to church, he was repulsed with disdain, and had the chagrin of seeing his youthful rival perfectly happy. To the young painter, the inundation of the Rhone was a fortunate event, and he recognized the truth of Shakespeare's assertion:

"There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune."

ENGLISH LIVING IN OLDEN TIMES. In the reign of Henry VII, the household of the Earl of Northumberland composed of one hundred sixty-six persons, who, with fifty-seven strangers, were daily entertained at the Earl's table at a cost of £111 16s 6d per annum. The yearly consumption of the noble family was as follows:—one hundred and thirty-three oxen, six hundred and forty-seven sheep, the greater part of which were salted, twenty-five hogs, twenty-eight veals, and forty lambs; these seem to have been reserved for the Earl's table, or that of the upper servants called the knights' table. The other servants, who ate salted meat almost the whole year, with few or no vegetables, had a very bad and unwholesome meat. Only seventy ells of linen, at eight pence per ell, were allowed for this great family, nor were there any sheets. This linen was made into eight table cloths for the Earl's table, and one for the knights', this last was washed only once a month. Their allowance of wine and beer was liberal, as they had ten tuns and two hogheads of Gascony wine, but the beer was very weak, only one quarter of malt having been allowed for two hogheads of it. Of this stuff, five hundred hogheads were annually drunk. Only ninety one dozen of candles were allowed, and as for soap no mention is made of it, but forty shillings is the whole sum named as the expense of washing. The family rose at six in the morning, dined at ten, and supped at four in the afternoon. His lordship and his lady had set on their table at breakfast, at seven o'clock in the morning, a quart of beer, as much wine, two pieces of salt fish, six red herrings, and four white ones, or a dish of sprats. During the year one hundred and sixty gallons of mustard were allowed for the use of the household.

INFLUENCE OF RAILROADS ON THE WEATHER. A German writer says, "when an extended portion of the earth's surface is brought by a net of railroad track into connection of electrical conductors the accumulation of the atmosphere is prevented as the iron tracks effect a constant electrical equilibrium between remote regions. By this means, a violent storm is rendered unlikely, and if one could arise it will undergo a continual if not a considerable diminution. Doubtful as the theory of storms may be, so much is certain, that their origin is in the effort of nature to produce an equilibrium of opposite electricities, and that they break out with more violence the greater the intensity of the opposition. The electrical forces which are the chemical processes that accompany evaporation. If one of these opposites, the electricity of the lower air for instance, is conducted away to other regions, the variation of the two is made less and the violence with which the equilibrium is established is diminished. By being thus conducted away the influence is lessened which the electricity of the lower atmosphere has on the clouds, and by which it attracts its opposite, thus accumulating storm and clouds on the electric point. For this reason, in a level country where there are nets of railroads, a storm cannot acquire that force of opposite electricity, and produce that heaping up of clouds which is possible where these conductors are wanting. For some years past the writer believes that he has observed a change in the storms of this place, and asks the attention of students of natural philosophy to the proof of this hypothesis. It is a fact that since Berlin has become the focus of several railroads, there have been few violent storms, and all that have risen have had a rapid and gentle termination."

EXPENSES OF A DAILY DRINK. The friends of the Temperance cause lose no opportunity of showing even to the moderate drinker, the economy, not to say health and character secured by avoiding strong drink. A man who drinks four glasses of liquor a day, at five cents each, expends annually $73 which will purchase

Three barrels of flour,	$25
Four pair of boots,	16
One hundred pounds of beef,	8
Forty pounds of butter,	10
A new hat,	4
A new satin vest,	5
A bonnet for his wife,	6

All these articles are drunk up annually in value, by merely four drinks a day.

A DOG STORY. A correspondent of the Hartford Times gives the following very excellent story, illustrating the wonderful sagacity and perseverance of dogs. "Some years ago my father had a large dog that he had learned to send from the field to the house, for anything he might want. It happened one day that he was at work about a half a mile from home, and wanted an axe; he told Carlo, (the name of the dog) to go home and get the axe;—the dog started off, and after being gone a considerable time, came sneaking back, but without the axe. 'My father bid him go back and get the axe. The dog went the second time, and after being gone as long as before, returned bringing a heavy beetle. My father now became satisfied that the dog could not find the axe, and went himself, and found it sticking firmly into a large log, and the helve gnawed from one end to the other, by the faithful animal, in trying to extricate it from the log, and being unable, he had taken the beetle as a substitute."

At Aleppo the north and east winds increase the heat in summer, and the west wind decreases it.

SINGULAR ACCIDENT. A singular and serious accident occurred recently at Cincinnati, (Ohio.) In company with a gentleman in a buggy a young lady was returning to the city from a country jaunt. Her long dress, flying over the side of the vehicle, caught in the splinters of a broken filloe of the hind wheel, and dragged her violently and suddenly out on the pavement. In the fall her skull was fractured and her recovery is doubtful.

THE SEASON. A farmer in Pittsfield, recently remarked to a person conversing with him relative to the backwardness of the season, that some dozen years since, on the 14th of May, he planted potatoes; on the day following, snow fell to the depth of eight inches on a level; and on the 16th, he drew wood upon a sled! The crops however that year were good. The statement of these facts will have a tendency to satisfy all who manifest impatience at the tardiness of spring, that better times are coming—probably.

A HARR HEAD. It is stated that Major Sumner, who at Sierra Gordo led the Rifles in the attack on the 17th, on the enemy's advanced position made a very narrow escape. In the charge, he was struck on the head by a musket bullet. The bullet was flattened to the thickness of a dime, and retained on its surface the print of the Major's hair, and yet, strange to say except the severance of an artery, he sustained no serious injury. The artery was taken up, and at the last accounts, the Major was doing well.

NANTUCKET. A great business has been done recently in dog-fishing, at this place. On the 16th, about forty boats were engaged in the business, the aggregate catch amounted to some ten thousand fish, worth about one thousand dollars. The liver oil is said to be equal to the best sperm-catch, from sixty to seventy-five fish yielding a gallon; while the fish are worth thirty-three cents per hundred to spread upon the land.

THE JAMESTOWN. The United States ship Jamestown, Capt. R. B. Forbes, arrived at Boston on the 16th inst., twenty-two and a half days from Cork, (Ireland,) having been absent exactly seven weeks. The cargo which she took out had been distributed among the suffering.

SMUGGLING. Elisha Jacobs, of the firm of E. & F. Jacobs, Kilby street, Boston, has been bound over in sum of twenty-five hundred dollars, on a charge of smuggling hard ware and fancy goods. A complaint has also been entered against his partner for swearing to false entries, and attempting to bribe a Custom House officer.

MAINE. The Legislature of Maine met last week and organized by the choice of democratic officers. There having been no choice of Governor by the people, the Legislature proceeded, in regular form, to fill that office. John W. Dana, (dem.) was elected Governor of Maine by a vote of 24 to 4. The Council is also democratic.

SHIP ANGLA SAXON. This vessel, which left Boston on the 5th inst., went ashore on Duck Island, (Nova Scotia,) in a storm, on the night of the 8th instant. Part of the cargo saved in a damaged state. There were a number of passengers on board, and among the number Mrs. Pelly and Mrs. Anderson, who had taken passage for England.

FLOUR AND GRAIN. Upwards of eleven thousand barrels of flour has arrived in Boston per the Western Railroad, during the past ten days, and a large amount has been exported. Corn, oats, rye, shorts, etc., have also come in in great quantities.

COST OF THE WAR. The following estimate, says the New York Sun, shows that we have paid a terrible price for our successes in Mexico. We have lost, including some of the ablest spirits of the country—

Killed and wounded around Monterey	500
At Matamoros	500
At Buena Vista	800
Taylor's incidental skirmishes	200
Operations in New Mexico	200
In California	250
At Vera Cruz	50
Com. Conner at Alvarado	10
Scott at Sierra Gorda	500
Total killed and wounded	3010
Died of the climate	2500
Grand total	5510

We have killed and wounded ten thousand Mexicans and occupied eight hundred thousand square miles of territory, equal to fifteen of our States.

MEXICAN ACCOUNT. The Mexicans write better than they fight—and magnify a defeat into a victory. The following is in their account of the battle of Sierra Gorda.

"Gen. Santa Anna ordered our troops to retire, in order to attract the enemy to a point near our batteries. It had the effect. Scott advanced and then our columns, displayed in such a manner as to facilitate the action of our cannon. Then commenced a vivid fire of both artillery and infantry, encircling the enemy, who was obliged to retire, and having twice afterwards attempted to force our positions, he was twice compelled to retire. These three charges have cost the enemy one thousand men killed and wounded, we have lost one hundred and sixty, of whom we count thirty as killed and the rest wounded."

This accounts for the loss of six thousand men in a very satisfactory manner.

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION. Two journeymen barbers employed in Boston, after finishing their work last Sunday, locked the door on the inside. One of them, an American, threw himself on a sofa, and his companion, a Mexican, took hold of him by the whiskers and remarked that he had too much hair on his chin, and then applied the edge of a razor to his throat with such effect as nearly to sever the wind-pipe, and afterwards inflicting another and a very severe wound on his forehead. The cry of murder was raised, the assailant fled and jumped into the water, was rescued and committed to jail for trial. The wounded man is expected to survive. Jealousy and the love of money are supposed to have led to the commission of the act.

EGG-COLLEGE. A grand chicken factory, or improved egg hatcher, is now operating, says the New York Sun, in that city. Young hens, by this process, are made to toddle out of their shells in a little less than no time, while the apparatus is so simple, every family might have one, and raise its own fowls. It is a curious sight.

A PRESIDENTIAL VISIT. The President of the United States, soon after his return from Raleigh, (N. C.) where he will be present at the Commencement of the University of that State on the first of June, will make a visit to New York city, and probably extend his tour Eastward.

MAY INSPECTION. The annual parade of the Boston Military Companies, takes place on Wednesday next, on Boston Common.

MILITARY ANNIVERSARY. Rev. William P. Lunt of this town, has accepted the invitation to preach the Sermon at the Anniversary of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company, in June, at Boston. The orator possesses talents to render his address highly worthy of the occasion.

ACCIDENTAL DROWNING. We learn that Aaron Eldridge, mate of the sch. Hopewell, was accidentally drowned at Neponset Village, on Monday last. It is said that he belonged to or near Cape May. Having cast off the painter of the small boat, he attempted to jump on board, but failed and before assistance arrived, life was extinct.

RAILROAD ARRANGEMENT. It will be perceived that the Boston Depot of the Old Colony Railroad is removed to the corner of South and Kneeland streets, and that the morning train from Boston starts at half past eight o'clock, instead of seven, as formerly. The Fall River trains for New York, are also advertised.

PRINCIPLES. The captains of every one of the Hingham packets positively refuse to carry any negro, under any circumstances.

FOURTH OF JULY. We have received the Mammoth Pictorial Double Brother Jonathan for 4th July, just issued from the press of Wilson & Co., New York. The entire first page is occupied by two very large and well executed National Engravings, viz: Washington's entrance in New York on the evacuation of that city by the British forces in 1783, and Washington taking leave of his officers on retiring from military life. This stupendous sheet contains, in the aggregate, no less than eighty eight engravings and portraits—many of them large and beautiful ones. The price is but twelve cents per copy, or ten for one dollar.

WANTON CONDUCT. The depredations which have been committed during the night time the past week by destroying blinds, breaking windows, etc., are deserving of the attention of the public in order that measures may be adopted to discover and punish such wanton and apparently malicious conduct. If they are repeated, the Selectmen should promptly offer a liberal reward for the detection of the rogues.

FROM MEXICO. Gen. Scott's official despatches state the American force at the battle of Cerro Gordo at 5500—Mexicans 12000—3000 Mexicans taken prisoners; 33 Americans killed—wounded, 33 officers and 338 men—Mexican loss about 1200.

There are rumors that the guerrilla system of warfare is to be adopted by the Mexicans.

RAILROAD ACCIDENTS. A collision took place on the Fall River Railroad, last Wednesday evening, between the steamboat train of cars for Fall River and the accommodation train for Boston. The accident occurred at a sharp curve near the East Stoughton depot. The engines were rendered useless, and the steamboat train was delayed five hours. About twenty persons were slightly bruised but not seriously injured.

The steamboat train the next morning, from Fall River, was thrown off the track in consequence of the misplacement of a switch, which caused a delay of two hours. No damage was done.

It would seem from the frequency of these accidents that there was mismanagement on the Fall River Railroad. Indeed, we have heard such complaints made, and think the travelling public should be informed on the subject. Unless more care be taken, it cannot be considered safe to take passage. No complaint can be made against the Old Colony Railroad in connection with the above accidents, as its gentlemanly Superintendent and obliging Conductors are ever at their post of duty.

FOREIGN NEWS. The Britannia which arrived at Boston, on Monday last, brings unimportant commercial accounts. The prospects of trade in the manufacturing districts were alarming, and all business except the corn trade, was at a stand—owing to the Bank of England withholding accommodations, obliging less but similar institutions to follow in its wake. Wheat and flour, meal and corn, have risen, English wheat most—not for the British, but the market in France, (where grain is very high) Belgium, etc.

His remains were conveyed to the city for interment. He possessed a spotless reputation, a well regulated mind, an affectionate, sincere and honest heart. It was his lot to endure physical suffering from disease of eleven years duration, yet he maintained throughout those trials of character for which he was remarkable—patience and courage; courage to live and to die. In his loss, if one circumstance more than another consoles us, now there is one less fountain in the waste through which we journey, it is that when summoned to put off mortality by the Great Proprietor of all, he was free from distress, his mind unclouded—and, conscious of his dissolution, he was prepared and willing to give to Death the Victory. May the Father of humanity make the consolations of the relatives and friends more abundant than the bereavement, and may they exercise that fortitude which will support them in affliction.

Health! Health!!
 SARSAPARILLA
 WILD CHERRY BITTERS.

THIS new and valuable extract of SARSAPARILLA and WILD CHERRY has been used with great success for the permanent removal of all such diseases as take their rise from an impure state of the blood; it promotes a healthy action of the Liver—strengthens the Nerves, and at once secures
 HEALTH AND VIGOR
 to the whole system. In all cases of JAUNDICE, INDIGESTION, DYSPEPSIA, LOSS OF APPETITE, HABITUAL COSTIVENESS, SCROFULA, HEADACHE, LANGUOR, and that
 DEPRESSION OF SPIRITS, which is so common a complaint in the SPRING AND SUMMER season of the year, this Medicine has not its equal—and a single trial will convince the most incredulous of its peculiar virtues.

For further particulars the reader is referred to pamphlets which will be sent by the Agents, showing the estimation which this valuable Medicine is held by those who have used it.

CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.
 Be particular and ask for Doct. Wood's SARSAPARILLA and Wild Cherry Bitters, and receive no other. This is the first preparation of these articles combined, ever offered to the public, and the great success attending its use has induced the unprincipled to counterfeit and imitate. As a preventive, see that the bottles have the words "Dr. Wood's SARSAPARILLA and Wild Cherry Bitters" pressed on the glass, and that each label on the bottle is signed by the proprietor, E. Thorpe, Jr., New Bedford.

Price $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5.
 AGENTS.

Also—The above are agents for Dr. Wood's Compound Balsam of Boneset and Vegetable Family Pills.

POETRY.

MAY.

To the woods away! 'tis the gladome May,
When the dew on the green herb shineth;
The lark mounts aloft at the dawning day,
And the cit for the free air pineth.

The gems of the frost in the earth are lost,
The wreaths of the snow are faded;
Dune Nature away hath her white garb tow'd,
And white flowers hith her bosom braided.

The sharp biting blast of bluff March is past,
And the April showers are fallen;
And the cooing dove in the deep woods fast,
To his gentle mate is calling.

Then away! then away! 'tis the gentle May,
And the thrush in the green birch singeth;
With the whistling merle, and the linnet gay,
Till each dell with their glad notes ringeth.

In the brawling stream, 'neath the bright sun beam
See the willow her bent bow laveth;
Whilst the dancing brook, like some saucy queen,
Now woos it, and then she leaveth.

Then away! then away! 'tis the gentle May,
And the housewife her neat cot trimmeth,
(The custom oft) with May flowers gay,
From the brooks, where the trout swimmeth.

On the sunny bank, see the flow'rets rank,
How they crowd with their gaudy faces;
How they vie with the daisies who jewell'd prank
In the glare of their showy garbs.

But adown yon glade, in the modest shade,
Wet with dew that the moonbeam raineth,
The violet blooms like some love-lorn maid,
Whom the jostling crowd disdaineth.

Then hurrah for our May! our gladome May!
When the rose and the woodbine bloometh;
Then the thrush and the merle pipe the livelong day,
And the goldfinch his bright wing plumeth.

GENTLE WORDS.

A young rose in summer time
Is beautiful to me,
And glorious the many stars
That glimmer on the sea;
But gentle words and loving hearts,
And hands to clasp my own,
Are better than the brightest flower,
Or stars that ever shone.

The sun may warm the grass to life,
The dew, the drooping flower,
And eyes grow bright and watch the light
Of Autumn's opening hour—
But words that breathe of tenderness,
And smiles we know are true,
Are better than the warmest light,
And brighter than the dew.

It is not much the world can give,
With all its subtle art,
And gold and gems are not the things
To satisfy the heart;
But oh! if those who cluster round
The altar and the hearth
Have gentle words and loving smiles,
How beautiful is earth!

THE THIRTY REQUISITES.

Thirty points of perfection each judge understands,
The standard of feminine beauty demands.
Three white;—and without further prelude we know,
That the skin, hands and teeth should be pecky as snow.
Three black;—and our standard departure forbids
From dark eyes, darksome tresses, and darkly fringed lids.
Three red;—and the lover of comeliness seeks
For the hue of the rose in the lips, nails and cheeks.
Three long;—and of this you, no doubt, are aware,
Long the body should be, long the hands, long the hair.
Three short;—and herein most beauty appears,
Feet short as a fairy's, short teeth, and short ears.
Three large;—and remember this rule, as to size,
Embraces the shoulders, the forehead, the eyes.
Three narrow;—a maxim to every man's taste—
Circumference small in mouth, neck and waist.
Three round;—and in this I see infinite charms—
Rounded feline apparent in legs, hips and arms.
Three fine;—and can ought the enchantment eclipse,
Of fine tapering fingers, fine tresses, fine lips?
Three small;—and my thirty essentials are told—
Small head, nose, and chin compact in its mould.

ANECDOTES.

A young convert in the country, recently got up and was making confession somewhat after this sort—
'I have been very wicked, indeed I have; I have cheated many persons, very many; but I will restore four fold; when he was interrupted by an old lady thus—
'Well, I think before you confess much more, you had better marry Mary Stebbins, as you agreed to!'

A young lady, who was formerly a member of a
Church of the old school, had left it and joined another.
One Sunday morning, she met her old minister, who bowed to her coldly, and said,
'Good morning, daughter of the devil.'
'Good morning, father!' she replied.

A young man, the son of a wealthy Pennsylvania quaker, enlisted recently. The next day his father went to see him. 'Joseph,' said the old gentleman,
'was the scer when thou consented to take up carnal weapons?' 'Yes sir—' 'I wasn't anything else,' responded the son. 'Here is some money, Joseph,' responded the father without moving a muscle of his hard features, 'and when thou gets on the field of battle thou wilt bear in mind that Anthony Wayne was a Pennsylvania, and that thou art my son.'

A sailor in the pit of a theatre, on looking over his playbill, read, 'an interval of twenty years occurs between the first and second acts.' At the end of the first act, he put on his old tarpaulin and left the house saying, 'few of these folks will live to see the end of it.'

MISCELLANY.

IDA WOODHULL.

'Dearest mother, why are you so sad tonight?' said Ida Woodhull, seating herself at her mother's feet, and looking earnestly up in her face. 'Have you any new cause for anxiety? or rather tell me, has my marrying Mr. Carson any thing to do with it? Oh, you will not, you cannot, dear mother, add your entreaties to father's, and, contrary to those principles you have endeavored to instill, persuade me to marry one I can never love; speak quickly, mother, and relieve my doubting heart.'

'You have partly divined the cause of my care, but not all; no, dearest Ida, I too well know the many cares and anxieties of married life, that require the most devoted affection to bear one through with them, (for instance this fearful change in your father,) ever to wish you to marry, save from the purest motives.'

Mr. Woodhull was an extensive merchant in Philadelphia, and, marrying early in life, for many years enjoyed uninterrupted happiness. He had two daughters, Ida and Emily, and two lovelier girls were not to be found. When Ida was about ten years of age, Mr. Woodhull failed; and being a man of the strictest honesty and integrity, he gave up every thing to his creditors, so that it took all he possessed to satisfy them. Fortunately for him, he had married an only daughter, whose property had been secured to her and her children—else had he found himself completely destitute. Mrs. Woodhull owned a beautiful place a short distance from the city, and here they now retired; and Mr. Woodhull, obtaining a situation in a bank, once again had every comfort at command, and enjoyed, for many years, health and happiness.

Shortly after this he was prostrated by a severe attack of congestive fever, and for many days seemed lingering between life and death; but, having a strong constitution and excellent nursing, he soon regained his health. Alas for poor Mrs. Woodhull! she found his mind so much impaired by illness as to incapacitate him entirely for business; but this was not all—he had become petulant, suspicious and unreasonable in all things. Well might Mrs. Woodhull say it needed the strongest attachment to bear with him; and this was the severest trial of all to this amiable woman, to find him, whom she had loved and revered, become so entirely changed.

Ida had now attained her nineteenth year, and added to her other accomplishments a highly finished musical education; but her principal charm was in the expression with which she sang—so completely would she touch the innermost chord of the heart, that not until she had ceased, were you aware of the spell that had bound you. She had a mind richly stored with knowledge, and being the constant companion of her inestimable mother, she had imbibed those high and holy principles which, based upon the Rock of ages, no time can change. Such was Ida at the commencement of our tale.

It was at a small party she first became acquainted with Mr. Carson, a rich Englishman, whom she completely fascinated; and he who had withstood the powerful attractions of the fashionable beauties of the day, at the age of forty was subdued by the magic of sweet sounds. From that time he became particularly attentive to Ida, never doubting he had only to offer himself to be most graciously accepted.

Ida intuitively perceived the impression she had made, and, too honorable to encourage feelings she could never reciprocate, endeavored as delicately as possible to discourage him in his attentions. Judge then what must have been her surprise and vexation, when her father bade her receive Mr. Carson as her accepted lover. It was then that Ida was made to feel the bitterness of that change which sickness had wrought. He that had formerly studied to gratify every wish of her heart—and at any time forego his own pleasure for that of his wife and daughters—now, in the embarrassments attending her situation, wished to sacrifice his daughter's happiness for that wealth which, having lost the means to obtain, he began to consider indispensable.

And now all the energy of Mrs. Woodhull's character was called forth to restore peace and comfort to her household. She endeavored to reason with her husband, and by fond persuasion to win him over to her view of the subject—for she was fully determined that Ida's warm affections and firm principles of truth should not become a sacrifice for wealth.

CHAPTER II.

'So, Mrs. Woodhull, you are resolved to uphold Ida in refusing one of the best matches of the day?' said her husband, as he impatiently strode up and down the breakfast room, which he had just entered.

'It may be my dear,' mildly replied Mrs. Woodhull, 'that we differ a little in the term best; and if you would consider a moment, I am sure you would agree with me. In the first place, Mr. Carson is twice the age of Ida, and I do not think that this inequality is calculated for happiness; and then he has a very great opinion of his own superiority, as regards his standing in society, and as an Englishman; this, you will allow, will hardly suit Ida, who is truly American in every feeling. To be sure he has wealth; but can that buy the affections of the heart?'

'Very true, my dear, it can not; but it will buy her every thing else that she wants; and now that Spring is fast approaching, I suppose her wants will not be very few; and there is old Dinah asking for money, and Pomp, too, will expect his new suit of clothes. I ask you, Mrs. Woodhull, where am I to get the means to keep up such an establishment? No, madam; if you wish to display your wisdom, you will, like Cato of old, part with your useless servants as soon as possible.'

This was a trying moment to Mrs. Woodhull, for these old servants had belonged to her mother. Dinah had been her nurse, as also her children's; and as she offered them their freedom, their answer was, 'No, we will live and die with you.' How then could she part with them? She pondered these things in her heart, but remained silent, as she generally did when her husband became thus excited—for she knew it would soon pass away, and he would be happy and contented until again aroused by some petty contradiction.

In the meantime, Ida had not lost one word of the conversation, but so busy was she with her own thoughts that she was not conscious her father had left them, until aroused from her reverie by Mrs. Woodhull asking her of what she was so intently thinking.

'Oh! dearest mother, I have such an excellent plan in contemplation, if you will only sanction it; but it needs your approbation to give the necessary courage to execute it. Do you remember Lydia Southmayd—how fond she is of music, yet how difficult it is to make a player of her? The other day, when I was playing for her, she threw her arms around me and said, if I only had you for a teacher, I am sure I should soon learn; and her father said he would give any money if she could play like me. Now, mother dear, do not think I am vain of my acquirements—for whenever I feel inclined to be uplifted by my superiority, I remember old Mr. Lawrence's remark of how grateful I ought to be to my Heavenly Father for giving me the power of contributing so much to the enjoyment of others, while also possessing such a useful accomplishment. And why may I not now turn it to our advantage? If I take Lydia as a pupil, I may get her sister also, and through them, several others; then see, mother, how comfortable we shall be; we can take care of Dinah and Pomp, and I need not annoy father any more by asking him for money. Speak, mother, and say you approve my plan, that I may go at once to Mr. Southmayd's and try what success I shall meet with.'

Mrs. Woodhull remained silent for some time; at last she said, 'I have no objection to your proposition; but I am afraid, my dear child, you have not well weighed the consequences of this first step in life. You will no longer be sought and admired as the fashionable Miss Woodhull, but henceforward sink to the level of those who support themselves—be looked upon simply as a music teacher; I mean in the eyes of the world. Now tell me, Ida, do you think you can endure this?'

For some moments Ida was silent; at last she looked up in her mother's face, her own face glowing with enthusiasm, and said, 'I trust, dearest mother, not to find many approved by my friends; but if I have only been valued for what I possessed, and not for what I am, I shall not be a loser by the operation; and my resolution is not altered by looking on the dark side of the picture.'

'Then go, my love, and may you be successful in your undertaking.'

Ida tied on her bonnet, and, kissing her mother, sped on her way towards the city, buoyant in spirits, imparted by a hope and trust in the world, natural to the young.

CHAPTER III.

'Congratulations, dear mother,' said Ida, as a few hours after the foregoing conversation, she entered her mother's sitting room, her cheeks glowing with the exercise of walking, and her eyes sparkling with happiness, 'congratulate me upon the success of my mission.'

'I found Mr. Southmayd in search of a teacher for a young ward of his;—and when I mentioned the subject to him, he seemed so much pleased you would have thought it was I offering a favor instead of myself—so you see I am to commence on Monday with three pupils. Now am I not fortunate?'

Her mother embraced her with tears in her eyes, and said she hoped she would never have cause to repent her generous purpose. And did she? We shall see.

Ida commenced with her young friends, and in a short time had the satisfaction of finding them rapidly improving; she had also added several pupils to her number—so that she was enabled to gratify, to the full extent, her generous nature.

And did Ida find the world as she had pictured it? Alas! for poor human nature—that we are compelled to answer—no. There were many of Ida's acquaintances who never saw her when they met—others gave a patronizing nod to the music teacher; but a few, of whom she had not much thought in her days of prosperity, now extended the hand of friendship to her who had so nobly borne a change of fortune. The dereliction of her friends caused Ida many a silent pang—but her heart now warmed and opened toward the few, and she now considered them as among God's gifts.

Ida had now become so much attached to her young pupils that teaching was rather a recreation than a task—but particularly did she enjoy her hours with the young Southmayds. One morning she had given them a piece in which she was to take a part. It was a beautiful trio—commencing with a short sob, until each, joining in, formed a harmonious whole. At first it was quite difficult for Mary to commence at the right time, when Lydia would burst forth in a merry peal of laughter, and the next moment make a mistake herself—but Ida, patient and persevering, at last accomplished her undertaking. After repeating the song several times they were enabled to go through it without a mistake. It was just as Mr. Southmayd commenced it for the last time, that Mr. Southmayd entered the adjoining parlor with a young friend.

He no sooner caught the first sound of Ida's voice, than he paused to listen in rapt attention. When they had concluded he turned to Mr. Southmayd and said, 'I presume that two of those voices belong to your daughters—but whose is the divine solo?'

Mr. Southmayd smiled and replied; 'I beg, Howard, for your mother's sake, you will not be falling in love with it—for the owner is only a music teacher.'

For an instant young Howard changed countenance then ingeniously answered: 'My dear friend I candidly acknowledge—I have changed my mind upon the only subject of difference between us.'

CHAPTER IV.

Eugene Howard belonged to one of the wealthiest and most aristocratic families in Virginia—and had imbibed from his mother all her pride of birth, and consequence.

Mr. Southmayd and his father had been bosom friends when boys, and their friendship remained unimpaired by the lapse of time. It was with great uneasiness, then, that Mr. Southmayd had observed the foible of young Howard, and had endeavored, as often as the opportunity offered, to combat against it. It was with unfeigned pleasure he now heard the acknowledgement of his error—and begged him to relate how the wonderful change had been wrought.

'You may remember when I left Philadelphia last summer, that I was bound for the Springs full of anticipated enjoyment. But I could not forget your warning—that if I did not overcome my mistaken pride of birth and circumstances, I should certainly become the prey of some designing fortune hunter. At the Springs I had a pretty fair field to test the truth of your principles, for those I met there were of all classes. To commence then—for I was in earnest—I entered my name as Mr. Nobody-of-any-consequence, and I was allowed to pass in and out without creating the least sensation. This was rather mortifying at first, but I was the better enabled to make my observations.'

Among the visitors, I observed one young lady who particularly interested me—she was not handsome, but I observed that those addressing her, did so with greatest deference. I inquired her name—and found to my astonishment, she was a Miss L.,—of New York, not at all famed for wealth—but exercising her good judgment in thinking for herself. Not being governed in her opinion of others by their wealth or fashion, her independence of character had given her considerable consequence. I soon obtained an introduction, and she helped to rid me of many of my follies. One evening as we sat conversing together, we overheard a conversation between two young ladies, who did not perceive our vicinity, which was of considerable service to me. Their conversation was to this effect.

'So, Anna, rich Mr. Howard is expected here soon, and I have made up my mind to catch him if I can.'

'If he is that piece of pomposity, Mary, that I have heard him described, I wish you joy of your bargain—I do not believe wealth ever bought the love of a noble heart, and that, in my opinion, is the only true riches—for that alone can never change. Mr. Howard may be a very fine young man, but I could never endure him if he is as proud as I have heard.'

'I don't care a straw for his pride; he has wealth in abundance—that is all I want!—and they passed on.'

'For some time we remained silent. I then asked Miss L.,—if she did not believe in the nobility of family? She said, 'as far as my ancestors can transmit to me a name untainted by one act of dishonor, I am proud of my ancestry, but as a true American, I bow to no nobility save that which God has planted in the soul. As for those who marry merely from motives of aggrandisement, they rarely fail to make a wreck of happiness. I sincerely hope Mr. Howard will escape Miss Mary.'

'In a few days Miss L.—returned to New York, where she was shortly after married; and I now resumed my consequence as the wealthy Southerner. It was wonderful to watch the manœuvres of mothers, and alas! of daughters also—to catch the fortune. Suffice it to say, I have determined never to marry unless I am satisfied affection and not wealth is the motive.'

'I honor your resolution,' said Mr. Southmayd. 'And now, Eugene, have on all your armor, for I am going to introduce you to the fascinating Miss Woodhull.' As he spoke he threw open the folding doors and ushered him into the music room.

CHAPTER V.

Great was Ida's confusion at the introduction of a stranger, for she suspected he had been a listener. Mr. Southmayd, pitying her embarrassment, asked for one of his favorite airs; and Ida soon forgetting all, save the sentiment of the song, recovered her composure quite unconscious of the sensation she was creating in the heart of young Howard. When she had finished, the silence that followed was sweeter praise than the most studied applause could have been; and after an hour spent in agreeable conversation, Ida departed, having other engagements to fulfil.

And why is it now that Ida looks forward to her hours with the young Southmayds with such pleasure? Howard had become quite an acquisition to their circle, occasionally accompanying them in some song; or taking some book with the ostensible purpose of reading—quietly to watch Ida, unconsciously strengthening his feeling of admiration for her into a deep and rooted affection.

And how fares it with Ida? Alas! she did not stop to analyse her feelings; but conscious only of the pleasure she enjoyed in his society, she was innocently tightening the silken cord that bound her. But she was soon to awaken from her dream. One morning, while Ida was awaiting the entrance of her pupils in the music room, young Howard entered with an open letter in his hand, and finding Ida alone, thus addressed her:

'I have just received a letter from mother requesting my return home. Will you allow me to thank you, Miss Woodhull, for the many delightful hours I have spent in your society.' As he spoke he kept his eye intently fixed upon her.

Poor Ida! she felt as though an arrow had entered her heart. A deadly paleness overspread her countenance, but true to her woman's nature, she endeavored to conceal her feelings; and, looking up with all the composure she could assume, caught the intent gaze of Howard, which sent the tell-tale blood mantling o'er brow and neck, revealing that which she would willingly have hidden.

And why did young Howard's face brighten with such intense delight? He felt he was beloved; and at once determined to seize the happiness presented him. Taking Ida's hand he respectfully asked permission to request it as a gift from her parents. Not until then did Ida truly realize how deep was her affection for Howard; but when she felt that for him she was willing to leave a mother so devotedly beloved, the feeling was too painful, and she burst into tears. Her lover fully sympathizing with her, endeavored to calm her agitation, in which he was soon successful; and accompanying her home, had the satisfaction of being accepted by Mrs. Woodhull as her future son-in-law.

Time now sped quickly on, and Ida was shortly to resign her happiness to another's keeping.—There was but one drawback to her felicity. In marrying she was depriving her mother of many luxuries to which she had been accustomed, but putting her trust in Providence, that all things would be ordered aright; her bridal morn found her radiant in smiles, full of hope and trust in him for whom she was about to leave all else. After the ceremony, and as they were about to depart, Mr. Howard gave his wife a paper, telling her it was her wedding present. How Ida's heart swelled with gratitude when she found it was a deed of gift, the income of which would enable her to make her beloved mother independent. But, turning to her husband, she said: 'How is it, dear Eugene, you can give me this extravagant present? Mr. Southmayd said you were of an excellent family, but never conveyed the slightest idea of your being wealthy.'

'You see, Ida, I had a mind to be loved for myself alone; and while I consider that I have secured the highest prize I could desire, you may thank dame Fortune for not turning the wheel around to you empty.'

And now, gentle reader, shall we leave them? or take a peep behind the curtain after a lapse of five years? Here is Mr. Howard's description of his home—you shall judge for yourself. Writing to his friend, he says:

'I wish you could see Ida fulfilling her duties as the head of my household. She is kind and gentle, yet firm in her rule; and there is not a slave on my plantation but looks upon her as almost an angel. As regards my mother, she is a complete convert to wealth of affection and principle. If you would know any thing of Ida as a mother, you must come and see her. I shall always bless the day when you made me acquainted with her.'

Thus it always! Those principles of truth and integrity which, if strictly adhered to, sometimes lead us through thorny paths, yet will they ultimately bring us into green pastures, where flowers continually spring up to bless us as we pass on through life; but if neglected and lost sight of for the sake of pomp and vanity, will surely end in the wreck of happiness.

TOWN OF LAWRENCE. Where two years ago was the location of some eight or ten farms and sand barrens, with the Merrimack river rolling quietly and peacefully along to its mother Ocean is now a busy, driving population of nearly five thousand souls, full of hope and anticipations of future prosperity and success. The location of Lawrence is one of the most lovely that the mind can conceive. From Tower or prospect hill, it looks like a vast basin scooped out from among the hills, with the beautiful Merrimack meandering through its centre. And from this distance, the irregularities of surface not being discernable, but having the appearance which it will soon have in reality of regular grade, it strikes the eye with pleasurable emotions. Already, as the river flows, the Canal, the streets laid out parallel with the River and Canal, and the streets at right angles with these, the vast buildings, boarding houses, stores and dwelling houses starting up in every direction, meet the eye, we can form some faint conception of the magnitude of the future Queen City of Essex County.

The belt of hills which surround the Town of Lawrence, will at some future day, be studded with splendid residences, which will overlook the City, and add beauty and diversity to the varied scenery.

'LOW ME TO TOAT YER BAR SKIN. Several weeks since, a young gentleman arrived in Washington from one of the Southern States, having in view an appointment of some kind. It was his first trip to the north, and having travelled through from home to the Capitol without stopping on the road, he had a better opportunity of feeling than seeing the effect produced by the change of climate. On the day after his arrival, he was introduced, by the members from his district, to several young ladies, with one of whom it fell to his lot to walk from Gadsby's to the Capitol. It was a bitter cold day, and the young lady was provided with a pious muffs, now so fashionable an article of dress at the North. Our hero was in a dilemma what to call it, or for what purpose it was used he did not know. But one thing he did know, and that was that it was anything but polite for a gentleman to allow a lady to bear such a burden. He scrutinized it with much uneasiness for some time—he could not divine what it contained, but he was perfectly familiar with the 'river,' and unable longer to restrain his gallantry he extended his hands, saying,

'Miss Julia, 'low me to toat yer bar skin for you.'

'Thank you, sir—don't trouble yourself,' replied Miss Julia blushing very red.

'Oh, 'tain't no trouble in the least,' replied our hero, insisting on relieving her of her burden.

The merry girl at last consented, rather than enter into so embarrassing an explanation; and taking the muffs under one arm, our hero offered the other to his fair companion, with whom he marched boldly along the Avenue to the Capitol, to the no small amusement of the passing crowd.

It is needless to add that he soon discovered his mistake, or that he has from that hour held all ladies' muffs in utter abhorrence.

A WISE LAW. It was one of the laws of Lycurgus, that no portions should be given with young women in marriage. When this great lawgiver was called upon to justify this enactment, he observed, 'that in the choice of a wife, merit only should be considered; and that the law was made to prevent young women being chosen for their riches, or neglected for their poverty.'

HANDEL. Handel, the celebrated musician, was a tremendous glutton. Among other stories told of him, it is said, that whenever he dined alone at a tavern, he always ordered dinner for three, and on receiving an answer to his question, "Is de dinner ready?" "As soon as your company comes, sir," he said, with anger, "I am de company—bring up de tinner."

PUNCTUATION. The following example of mal-punctuation strongly illustrates the necessity of putting stops in their proper places:— "Cmsar entering on his head, his helmet on his feet, armed sandals upon his brow, there was a cloud in his right hand, his faithful sword in his eye, an angry glare saying nothing, he sat down."

THE FACE. We find upon a human face, when it is old, the notched contour-stick of severe sorrows, which have so rudely passed over it; and when it is young, it appears to us like a flower-bed on the slope of a volcano, whose next eruption will overwhelm it with destruction. Ah! either the future or the past is written on the face, and makes us, if not melancholy, at least mild and gentle.

MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE. A few years ago and many perhaps were startled at the seeming presumption of these words. They, at first thought, supposed some fanatic or speculator had presumed to interfere with the prerogatives of a higher power, to enhance his own interests by operating upon the credulity of the ignorant and unwary. But Life Insurance is now better understood, and is hailed by thousands as the messenger of relief. Thanks to the originator of an institution that is destined to secure from penury and want, the widow and orphan, whose kind and considerate husband and father had while in health, secured to be paid at his death a sum adequate to his necessities. The day is not far distant, when Life Insurance will be more generally embraced than any other Insurance now extant, and thousands yet unborn will echo praise to its founder. Few men are secure from the vicissitudes of business, and none can say but they may be cut off in an unpropitious moment in their pecuniary affairs, or lose their health with the loss of property which would render it impossible to secure a policy to their family. Every husband and father, therefore, should avail himself of Life Insurance, while in the enjoyment of good health.

The Legislatures of several of our States, with a view to encourage Life Insurance, have enacted laws very liberal towards the widow and orphan. It only requires that the husband and father should embrace the institution to secure beyond a contingency, such sum as he may see fit to be paid to his heirs at his death. A little pamphlet issued by the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, contains much valuable and important information upon the subject; contrasting the difference between the strictly mutual principle, and the stock principle. The advantages and inducements held out by this company are very favorable to the assured, and it justly merits a large share of public favor.

An agency has been established in this town, and persons calling at the office of William B. Bugbee, M. D., can obtain pamphlets gratis, and any information will be cheerfully given.

THE REMARKABLE ADVENTURES OF CAPTAIN HESTIS. Boston: Published by Silas W. Wilder & Co.

We have received a copy of this interesting work. The author formerly resided in Roxbury, and for several years was in the employ of Deacon Elisha Wheeler, who keeps a grain store on Boston Neck. At the time of the Canada rebellion in 1837—8, he was residing in the northern part of New York, and became interested in the subject of Canadian independence. He was a prominent actor in the Patriot movements on the frontier, and was one of the fearless band who fought at the Windmill, where he was taken prisoner, and afterwards banished to Van Dieman's Land, in company with many other Americans, who suffered almost indescribable hardships, during a captivity of six years. After his liberation he returned home through California, and altogether the narrative of his adventures, by sea and land, is one of the most readable and captivating books which we have had occasion to notice for a long time. It is an authentic as well as entertaining account of personal suffering and adventure, that cannot fail to interest the reader, far more than the fictions of the day. For sale by Redding & Co., Boston.

CHANGE OF NAMES. At the late session of the Legislature of this State, the following persons in Norfolk County had leave to change their names, viz:—

Whiting; Susan Maria Carney of Quincy, minor, may take the name of Susan Maria Richardson; Peter Cushing of Weymouth, may take the name of William Pomroy Cushing; Elizabeth Baxter, minor, of Quincy, may take the name of Elizabeth Lydia Baxter; Roby Lyndon of Roxbury, may take the name of Alfred Henry Lydstone.

EDUCATION AT THE WEST. Miss Beecher, the daughter of the venerable Dr. Beecher, is uniting in her efforts to promote education at the West. She is to meet soon at Albany, twenty-six young ladies from New England, who are to go out with her as teachers, after having spent a season at the State Normal School. Her plan is to transfer a large number of educated young ladies to the west, and there employ them as teachers.

STEAMBOAT CHALLENGE. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Esq., having built a new steamer called after himself, which has not yet been tried, offers to run her against any boat afloat, to any place where there is sufficient water to float her, for any sum from one thousand to one hundred thousand dollars. It is reported that one of the other lines are ready for the challenge only they alter some of the terms as a "crank-out." Vanderbilt can't be beat—such a whole-souled gentleman will always win victories, no mistake!

FALL RIVER RAILROAD. The Boston Chronicle says this railroad route is fast coming into favor. If the number of accidents bring it into favor, then the Chronotype editor has told the truth. The depreciation in the stock of this road is a complete refutation of its gaining public favor. "Birds of a feather flock together," so does the mismanaged Fall River Railroad and the eccentric editor of the Chronotype agree in matters where interest is concerned. The public hear of accidents and will patronize routes under good management.

MEXICO. Gen. Scott is pushing forward his army for the capital. The guerrilla warfare does not amount to much—except a license to Mexicans to rob each other. Santa Anna is thought to have been rendered insane by his reverses, he keeps up his force for his own protection. He has threatened to attack Vera Cruz. At the capital, affairs are getting worse. Gen. Shields will recover, probably. Accounts from Santa Fe state that an attempt had been made to get up a rebellion, the ring-leaders were being tried. Some of them had been hung and others whipped. Gen. Cushing had his leg broken broken by a fall at Matamoros.

SAD CASUALTY. Friday morning last, a premature explosion took place at Mr. Rogers' Ledge in this town, by which several people were injured. The most unfortunate of all was Mr. Josiah Leavitt. He was standing near the rock when it exploded and received a huge fragment upon his body which fractured both of his limbs at the ankle joint. Both bones of the right leg were completely crushed above the ankle and the muscles severely lacerated. His head and left hand were but slightly injured in comparison with the lower extremities. His situation is extremely critical.

Capt. Cummings, who was engaged in blasting the rock and who at the time was holding a keg of powder, was but slightly injured in the left arm.

Drs. Woodward and Bugbee were immediately called, and the professional experience of the latter gentlemen, who has recently commenced practice in this town, answered the highest expectations and fully showed that at the Hospital he had not studied without a proper appreciation of the position in which he was placed. Of Dr. Woodward not a word of praise is required—he is known.

The Directors of the Walpole Railroad Company have concluded a contract with Messrs. E. Gilmore and Company, for the grading, masonry, etc., of the entire line of their road from Dedham to Walpole.

It is the invariable practice throughout Holland, to bid down, instead of up, at an auction. WILLIAM E. AMBUSH, would respectfully inform the Ladies and Gentlemen of Quincy, that he has constantly on hand a new and unequalled far superior to the far famed Bogle Hyperion, which when scientifically applied, renders the Hair soft and pliable and imparts to it a peculiar gloss, a flexibility which cannot be obtained from any other combination.

CHAMPOOING MIXTURE,

He would also recommend the application of his superior Hair Mixture to those afflicted with cutaneous diseases, to which may be attributed the loss of hair, especially by the young. It is a stimulant to and nourishes the growth of the hair; quickly restores the scalp to a healthy condition which must be accomplished before the hair will make its appearance.

Ladies wishing this application will be waited upon at their residences by W. E. Ambush, by leaving orders at his Emporium, Souther's Building, N. B. CHILDREN'S hair cut at their residences at half price.

POETRY.

For the Quincy Patriot.

OMNIA VANITAS.

Yestreen, as I sat sad and lone
Deep musing on the past;
On pleasures now forever gone,
On joys too bright to last,
I sighed—omnia vanitas.

Youth! thy brightest dreams are fled,
Manhood! thou bring'st but cares,
While thinking on the lost and dead,
On feeble age and frosty hairs,
I sighed—omnia vanitas.

Friends fall from us one by one
Into the darksome grave;
Tearful, we have sad requiems sung
For the young, the gifted and the brave,
Alas! omnia vanitas.

Wealth, glory, and ambition lure,
Blind passions lead us on;
We heed them all, but find too sure,
They're phantoms vain and quickly gone,
I sighed—omnia vanitas.

Departed spirits of the mighty dead,
Are whispering through the past—
"Our time and glory all are fled,
No earthly power can last,
For—omnia vanitas."

Yours Physic.

THE FIREMAN'S RALLY.

Don't you hear the bell, boys?
Turn out! turn out!
Its booming peals are on the air,
While all around is lurid glare;
Don't you hear the bell, boys?
Turn out! turn out!

Don't you see the light, boys?
Turn out! turn out!
Start up the engine's rattling wheels,
And spur the pavement with your heels;
Don't you see the light, boys?
Turn out! turn out!

Up, and man the breaks, boys!
Play on! play on!
O! cheerily bright the water leaps,
Where crackling embers fall in heaps,
Up, and man the breaks, boys!
Play on! play on!

Never faint nor flag, boys!
Play on! play on!
For where we pour the steady stream,
See all is white with hissing steam;
Never faint nor flag, boys!
Play on! play on!

Stop the hydrant's rush, boys!
All out! all out!
Foreman stay your trumpet calls,
Charred and blackened are the walls;
Stop the hydrant's rush, boys!
All out! all out!

Now give o'er your fun, boys,
All out! all out!
The siffling gleams in darkness die,
Along where smouldering ruins lie;
So give o'er your fun, boys!
All out! all out!

THE FIRST BEE IN SPRING.

List! list! to that low, but most musical song,
Which speaketh much more to the heart than the ear;
We hear it, then lose it, 'till floateth along,
Like the voice of a spirit astray in the air;
'Tis the hum of an insect—a gay little thing,
'Tis the hum of the honey-bee first in the Spring.

Bright child of the summer! we welcome thee here,
We welcome thy promise of sunnier hours—
Of all the gay sounds that awake the young year,
And call into life its profusion of flowers;
Not one such delightful sensations can bring,
As the hum of the honey-bee first in the Spring.

But say, wast thou little, wee, little bee, to depart
From thy home, while the winter is lingering still?
Thou wilt shrink from the blast, like a sensitive heart,
From the word of unkindness, the look that is chill—
Blow gently ye breezes! Oh check not the wing
Of the herald of sunshine, the first bee of Spring.

Thou' few are the blossoms, he visiteth each,
Nor seemeth to pine for the flow he hath not;
How well it would be, if proud man he could teach,
To gather the pleasures that fall to his lot,
Without sighing for more, and while working to sing,
Content as the honey-bee first in the Spring.

ANECDOTES.

A raw down-easter was recently hired by a Cabinet maker in the city, and, like a true yankee, managed to pass for a great deal more than he was worth. One day the proprietor showed him a very pretty mahogany veneered bureau and told him to "smooth it off," as the purchaser would call for it in the course of the morning. Shortly after, Johnny saw the bureau in appearance in the warehouse. "Well, John, have you made that bureau shine well?" "Well, I guess it don't look bad, but it was a tarnation job though, I couldn't get it any other way, and I took the foreplate and peeled the darned bark all off on it!"

An obstreperous husband, convicted of beating his wife, upon being admonished by the judge that the wife was the weaker vessel, replied—"Then if she's the weaker vessel, she musn't carry so much sail."

A pedagogue, in dispar with a stupid boy, pointed at a letter and asked if he knew it. "Yes, sir," "Well, what is it?" "I know it very well by sight, but not me if I can remember his name."

MISCELLANY.

THE THREE BEDS IN HEAVEN.

I am not aware that the following legend has ever been in print, or ever been written. I heard it for the first time, very recently, from the lips of an esteemed young friend to whom it was narrated by an Irish woman whom she visited while confined by sickness to her humble home.

"I went," says my fair narrator, "to see good Biddy O'Connor, having heard in the morning by her little boy Pat, that she was ill. I found her sitting up in her arm chair with a huge night cap, fringed with enormous ruffles upon her head, and her shoulders wrapped in an old shawl."

"Ah! Biddy," said I, "I am sorry to find you ill. But as you are sitting up, I trust you are better?"

"Och, an' it's yêr own swate face 'ud make a dead woman better," answered Biddy, in her rich brogue. "It is the joy of my eyes iver to see ye, Miss! The sight of ye is welcome to the Docther, for pleasant words is better nor bitter medicines!"

"Where is your bed, Biddy?" I asked, observing that her humble cot was gone.

"It's doin' God's service, I hope, Miss; kap-in' the bones o' a poor Canadian man from the hard boards of a jolt cart!"

"Have you given it away?"

"Yes, Miss, answered Biddy, crossing herself devoutly.

"What will you do for a bed, now you are sick?"

"Och, I have no fears. If I have no bed here again, I'll have a bed in Heaven on a golden bedstead!"

"Who have you given it to?"

"It was a poor family o' the Canady people, Miss, as stoop at my door last night. Seven o' them, big and little, in a one horse cart, and on the bare boards laid sick the old father, while the poor wife laid the horse. So I tuk pity on the poor sick man and gave him my straw bed, puttin' it in the bottom o' the cart an' helpin' his wife lay him on it. He was so thankful and said he felt so easy after."

"But you were too poor, Biddy. You have been too generous."

"Niver a bit, Miss, niver a bit, Miss," answered Biddy with zeal. "Have you never heard of the story o' 'The Three Beds in Heaven,' Miss?"

"Never, Biddy."

"Then if you will please be seated on that bit of a box there, forement me, it's me will be happy and privileged to tell it to ye."

So I took a seat as Biddy wished me to do, and prepared to listen to her story, which I give as follows, but not in Biddy's brogue:

THE THREE BEDS IN HEAVEN.

A great many years ago, there lived in old Ireland a very rich man who had no other family than a wife and a stout, honest-hearted Christian serving maid. The man's name was Brien O'Brien, and the maid's name was Bridget. The house in which Brien O'Brien lived was situated in an out-of-the-way lonely spot, upon the wide moor, two leagues from a town on one side and close to a wild range of 'Ban-shee hills' on the other. The house was large, and had been the home of the O'Briens for three hundred years. There were large out-houses for grain and potatoes, a mill near for corn, and not far off in a little glen was a 'distil'.

The high road passed within a quarter of a mile of Brien's house; and from his front door of a clear morning, he could see up and down it for a long ways. There were but few houses visible over the wide moor and on the heath hill-sides, and these were the shepherds' cots or huts of cattle-watchers.

Brien was a man of good temper and cheerful, and though rich, he would have been liberal with his goods but for his wife, who was very avaricious, and held such a tongue over Brien that he was forced to do as she would have him, for the sake of peace.

Never a beggar came to her door when she was at home that ever went fuller away. Nay, she followed him with maledictions and threatened him with Brien's wolf-dogs if he came a second time. But when Brien, as sometimes it chanced, was at home alone, his wife and the maid being gone to the next market town, it was a merry entertainment the poor beggar had who weary feet took him towards Brien's household. They sat at his board and drank ale and whiskey, and ate bread and bacon like lords. When his wife would come home at night and discover the intruder made upon her ladder, she would scold Brien for half the night; but he took it easily, being as we have said of an easy nature.

The maid Bridget, however, was the blessing of that house; for although Brien was kind at times, yet his fear of his wife often led him to treat with harshness those he would have entertained kindly. Harshness and cruelty, whether they proceed from natural hardness of heart or are put on from fear of others, is alike censurable. Bridget, however, was good throughout and always. If her mistress barred the door against the poor wayfarer, (and many a one passed that way and stopped at night-fall, seeking shelter, for the road and region were lonely,) she would cast them a morsel from the window.

Bridget was a good Christian, and did all she could for Christ's love. She remembered that he had said He should be as pleased with a cup of cold water given to the poor, as if bestowed upon himself. She regarded all human beings as her brothers. She saw Christ's image in every poor man's face. The tones of her voice spoke the goodness and benevolence of her heart. Never were two persons, dwellers under one roof, so unlike as Dame O'Brien and her maid Bridget. We shall soon see how Bridget was rewarded for her good deeds.

One winter's night, Brien, his wife and Bridget were awakened by a knocking at the outer door and a voice supplicating admission. The night was stormy and blustering, and the icy winds howled over the moor like the roar of wolves.

"Do you hear that, Dame?" said Brien. "It is a hard night for man or beast to be abroad. Shall I get up and let him in?"

"No! What business has he to be out at such hours. He should time his journey better."

"Missus," said Bridget, whom the voice had called out of her bed, and who came to the door of her mistress' room with her shawl cast over her head and her shoes in her hand, "mistress, please let me open the door to him. The night is awful! and hear! how he asks in the name of sweet Pity."

"Good folks, for the love of Jesus, let a wayfarer have entrance and lodge with you to-night," said a voice of remarkable sweetness, in a tone of earnest pleading.

"You can't come in! We have but two beds in the house; one my husband and I occupy and in the other sleeps my maid."

A third time the traveller knocked, and his voice was heard, calm and sweet to the ear, above the hoarse storm.

"The night is dark. The way is blocked up. Shelter is far! and I have travelled long. Open, good people, and let me lodge with you in Christ's good name."

"Oh! mistress do you hear? How can you say nay to such a prayer!" cried Bridget.

"Yes, wife, you must not turn him away!" said Brien, hesitatingly, for he dared not speak his mind out.

"Oh, let me open the door to him, kind mistress!" said Bridget. "Give me the key and I will let him come in. He shall occupy my bed, and I will sleep upon the hearth."

"If you will let him in, then," said the cruel mistress, to her weeping maid, "you may, but on condition that you relinquish four months of your wages."

"That I will do most gladly, mistress," answered Bridget; and, taking the key from her mistress' pillow, she opened the door, and let the traveller in. He was a young man, and his garments were covered with sleet and snow. In his hand he grasped a staff, with a handle shaped like a cross. His dress was humble; but his countenance was very mild and prepossessing.

The next morning he went away, expressing his gratitude for his reception, and particularly fixing his eyes upon Bridget as he spoke.

The storm continued throughout all the day, and the next night, seemed, if possible, to increase in vehemence. About midnight, Brien and his wife and Bridget were awakened by a knock at the door, and the voice of the traveller whom they had admitted the night previous.

"I have wandered far along, kind friends, and night has come on and overtaken me in this wild moor as before. Let me in, good people, in Jesus' name!"

A second time the faithful Bridget plead in his behalf to her enraged and cruel mistress.

"I will give him my bed as before, sweet mistress, if you will let him enter, and the hearth to-night will lie as pleasant as it did last night."

"If you will relinquish another third of your year's wages you shall let him in," answered her mistress.

"This will I gladly do. Enter, weary traveller, in Jesus' blessed name!" she added, as she threw wide the door. "You shall take my bed, as you did last night."

Early in the morning, the traveller rose and took his leave, mildly and sweetly thanking them as before. Bridget would have detained him, for the storm still raged, but he said to her that he must depart on her way.

All day the tempest continued, and the day closed, as the two preceding ones had done, in a storm. The winds were laden with icy rain, and the roar of the sweeping blast was terrific.

"If that traveller is abroad to-night," said the wife of Brien O'Brien, as she listened from her pillow to the tempest, "he won't trouble me again with his call for lodging; for he will be sure to perish ere he could reach the threshold."

She had hardly got the words out of her mouth ere a strong rap was heard upon the door. Three knocks were given just as the stranger of the two preceding nights gave them. Dame O'Brien trembled between superstitious fear and anger as she heard them.

"It is the same man again," said Brien O'Brien, with amazement. "He must be a demented person, ever wandering about the moors, and never reaching any inn or town! He shall not come in again."

"That he shall not," responded his wife.

"Good Christian friends," said a voice at the door, a low, sweet, calm voice, yet heard distinctly above the uproar of the elements, "I come a third time to seek a lodging for the night and a shelter from the keen blasts. Open to me, I pray you, and let me come in."

"Never shall you again cross that threshold," cried Dame O'Brien, with vehemence.

"Oh, my sweet mistress," cried good Bridget, kneeling by her bed-side and clasping her hands together: "oh, for the love of Christ, let not a fellow creature perish!"

"He has come twice for lodgings, and we have given it to him. What does he here again?"

"If the storm was a plea for him the first night and the second night, sweet mistress, so is it to-night also," said Bridget; "for it beats upon his head more fiercely than it did then. Why he should lose his way thrice, I know not; but that he has lost his way and needs our aid is plain. Oh, kind mistress, give me the key, and let me open to him. I will again give him the use of my bed. The hearth is warm, and methinks I slept more soundly there than in my bed."

"If you will remit the remaining third part of your year's wages, the traveller shall also come in to night," answered her avaricious mistress.

"That I will do, good mistress, and cheerfully, too," cried Bridget, as she took the keys and opened the door, letting in as she did so, the same dripping young man who had the two previous nights craved her hospitality. As before, he occupied Bridget's bed—she sleeping on the hearth; and in the morning he rose up early and went away as before.

The day was bright and beautiful—the birds sang—the skies were soft and blue, and at evening the round moon rose, lighting up the scene with the beauty of enchantment. The long night passed—the morning came, and the traveller had not appeared. Days, weeks passed away, and he was no more seen, and almost forgotten. At length, just one year from the night on which he had first appeared, the wife of O'Brien sickened, and on the third night she died.

Another year passed away. It was night. Brien was seated in his hall, making over his accounts. Bridget, still the faithful servant of his household was near by at a table brewing. Her master's face was towards her, and as she happened to look up, she saw a sight that made her blood run cold. She had never before seen a ghost, but she knew the horrible being she beheld standing by her master's shoulder, a little behind him, was the ghost of his avaricious wife.

"Master, look! Jesus have mercy on us!" she cried, crossing herself; which she had no sooner done than she took courage.

"What do you see?"

"Your wife's ghost!"

"Where?"

"Look behind you."

He did so, and, beholding her, he fell to the floor insensible.

"Bridget," said the spirit.

"My poor mistress," answered the maid sadly, for she knew from the looks of the ghost that it was in a state of suffering.

"Bridget, I am sent hither to tell thee that thou hast three beds in Heaven."

"Three beds in Heaven?"

"Yes. Thou didst three nights give up thy bed to a storm-driven traveller, and didst sacrifice a year's wages for three nights' lodging for one a stranger to thee. Know those who deny themselves here shall be rewarded three-fold in the world to come. For the three beds thou didst give up to the traveller, three beds or places are there in Heaven. One of these is for thy own use when thou comest there; the other two which thou hast earned by thy charity thou canst bestow on whom thou wilt. Any two thou mayst name that are now on earth or doing penance in purgatory, shall instantly be translated to Heaven! Would thou know now who the traveller was who sought shelter, and which I, alas! denied, but which thou didst purchase for him with thy bed and wages?"

"I know, poor mistress, he was one for whom Christ died. I ask no more to know."

"Thou must hear whom thou didst do such service unto. The wayfarer was the Lord Christ. He came to try thy faith and reprove my sin. For thy charity thou art rewarded, while for my cruelty I am punished in purgatory."

"Poor mistress, poor mistress! what am I that I should be thus honored while you suffer!" said Bridget, after her first surprise at what she had heard passed by. "If I have three beds in Heaven, one shall be for me, one for my master, and one for thee!"

Thus spoke the good maid; and hardly had she ceased, when the suffering ghost became transformed into a bright smiling angel—and, spreading its wings, seemed to ascend through the roof, and the next moment became invisible. Bridget fell on her knees and crossed herself, and remained several minutes in devotion.

The next year Bridget's master died, leaving her all his wealth. She lived to a good old age, doing good with it, and at length was to rest forever in one of the Three Golden Beds in Heaven her sweet charity had won for her.

This legend goes to show that no act of benevolence remains without its reward. What we do for the stranger, we know not that we are not doing it for 'the Lord.'

"It shows too," devoutly said Biddy O'Connor to the narrator, "how that by their good works Christians in this world are able to help poor burning souls out of purgatory, and give them a bed in Heaven. If Bridget had given up her bed only for one night, it's but the one bed the darlin' would have had in Heaven—but enough for herself that same any how, sure. But by givin' it up two nights more, she earned two more good places in Heaven for her master and mistress. So it's the truth, we can help each other! It is not onct we must do good, but as many times over onct as we can, and then it's many a one o' our kith and kin we'll help out o' the pit o' purgatory!"

We end our story with the following reflections by our fair narrator:

"What exquisite touches of beauty, in all the pictures presented to us in this simple legend, so delicate and full of significance, that they reach the soul ere the eye has had time to behold them, and with a mysterious language fill us with deepest musings on the link that binds the life in Time to that in Eternity."

"The sweet, earnest voice of him who seeks shelter from the storm, his mild face and the cross-topped staff he bears, reveal to us, ere we are told, that again in human form our Lord is travelling on earth, to know whom Love hath made his."

"The words 'sweet mistress' from Bridget to one whom the tale tells us, was not ever gentle and kind, were beautifully natural from one whose heart was too severe, through devotion and pious works, to reflect the evils in another."

"The tale simply says she slept more sweetly on the hearth than she had ever done on her couch, and leaves us to feel why it could be so. Then, in a view of the other world, it shows us three beds in Heaven purchased with three beds on earth, and we are again left to muse in silence on which is more to be desired—a rest on earth or a rest in Heaven."

"The repose, with her, of two whom she loved on earth, granted on account of her three acts of self denial, when one giving up of her bed to the weary traveller would have procured rest for herself, shows us the efficiency of a life of patient well-doing; in relieving others from the heaviness of sin, by its holy influence, through occasional acts of sacrifice of self, might test our love for Heaven upon earth, and give to our souls rest."

"At a first glance it might seem unnatural that the gentle traveller should have been willing to take the couch of the poor maid Bridget; but he was taking the dress of earth to give her back the seven times tried gold of Heaven. Upward he bore her treasure, while the sun three times rose and set upon her earthly way."

"Only one of deep piety, who had himself known the sacrifice of the pleasures of this life, could have made this legend. It is not of the intellect, but of the pure heart, which may see God."

LEGISLATION IN MASSACHUSETTS.

TO THE PEOPLE: Much complaint is made by the sober and reflecting people of the 'Old Bay State,' that their legislation is not only too much, covering a vast expanse of minutia and detail, but that, in consequence of the long sessions of the Legislature, more time is devoted, and a larger expenditure incurred, than what the necessary business of the Commonwealth requires. Indeed it has got to be proverbial, that twice as much time and expense is incurred, in our legislation, than is necessary. The sessions of the Legislature occupy an hundred days or more! It is believed that not more than about a moiety of the time and expense is necessary; or that, under an improved mode of legislation, nearly half of the time and expense might be saved! I avow myself of this opinion. I have had some experience in the matter, and my convictions are, that ours is a most vitious, injudicious, and unprofitable mode of legislation; that it admits not of defence; and, that it is high time for the people to awake to the evils of the policy, and to take vigorous and decisive measures to effect the necessary reform. Let me explain. At present, the practice is, in measures either of great or little importance, whether of private, or public interest, upon the promulgation of the same, at the very first move, the subject is committed to either a special or a joint committee, to examine, investigate, and report for the government of the conduct of the two branches. All this is very well, provided the practice were to investigate in a simple, plain and straight forward way, with the sole object of eliciting and setting forth the truth—of presenting the subject on the part of the committees to the legislature for their action, in its true merits. But what is the fact in the case? What is the system practised, and what its operation? A committee is no sooner constituted, than a resort is had to men of the law, to numerous counsel on either side, to direct, control, and try the case, as it were, judicially. All, or many, of the forms of a judicial trial are instituted, and insisted upon by the counsel, who, in fact, rule the committees, and labor indefatigably not to elicit the truth, but to make out a case for their clients; to prove, or make it appear, that 'white is black,' or, 'vice versa.' All this time the interests of the counsel employed are entirely distinct from those of the public. The counsel labor for their clients for pay; and large pay—say five to fifty dollars per each daily session! Hence it is for the interest of counsel, thus liberally paid, to protract the investigation of subjects to the extreme limits—to hold ten or twenty sessions of a committee, where only a small number is needed. The operation of this practice is obvious; it is adverse to the interests of the Commonwealth; it causes unnecessary delays, and this too, without promoting any useful end. After all this array and display of legal talent, no better result is had than would be attained by pursuing a more simple and rational course, that of dispensing with the labor of those who work for hire, whose interests are distinct and personal; and whose object, only, is the prosecution of a profitable business. It is high time a different course was adopted. There exists no necessity for the employment of lawyers before legislative committees. Their action does not in the least facilitate the transaction of business; on the contrary, it delays and mystifies, and in ninety nine cases in a hundred, it tends not to a wiser result than would be arrived at, without their aid, in less than a moiety of the time expended. If it is asked what course of action shall be substituted, I answer, in all cases, require of the parties interested in the success of any proposed measure, that they should furnish documentary proofs and evidence, and exclude a resort to parol evidence. In this way, in a vast majority of cases, legislative committees would be enabled to come to a wiser result in less than a tithe of the time than is now occupied. And it would follow, that the reports of committees would be so prompt and early, as that two sessions of the legislature could, with propriety, be held, each day, where only one session is now held until late in its sittings. In this way not more than a moiety of the time and expense, as I have before asserted, would be needed for the transaction of the business of the Legislature.

There is no necessity for such

From Mexico. Gen. Worth entered Puebla on the 15th ult., without any loss.

A Mexican guerilla party has been captured near Vera Cruz.

Santa Anna has halted near Puebla with fifteen battalions, well organized, and there is a prospect of another hard fight. It is rumored that Gen. Worth has gone in pursuit of him.

FOREIGN. The Royal Mail Steamship Hibernia arrived at Boston last Thursday morning, having made the passage in fourteen and a half days, and bringing out one hundred and ninety thousand pounds in specie.

The commercial pressure in England continued unabated. Money was so scarce that an artificial value was imparted to it, and men of undoubted solvency were obliged to sell out at whatever sacrifice. All public securities were depressed and trade was brought nearly to a stand still.

Cotton has declined. Breadstuffs are still on the advance.

The market for American cured provisions keeps steady; and as there is little or nothing of this description of goods now arriving from Ireland, the importations from the United States, in most instances, meet a ready sale.

The reports of the progress of pestilence in Ireland are quite disheartening, and notwithstanding all the imports of food, and the immense extent of relief in food and money, great destitution still prevails, and the markets are advancing. All accounts concur in showing that the mortality is still very considerable.

The prospects of the next harvest, in France, were extremely promising. Notwithstanding this prospect however, the markets continue to rise in various parts of France.

JUVENILE SINGING SCHOOL. We would invite the attention of all the "Young Singers" to the notice of Mr. Felt, in another column. We understand that he proposes to give a musical entertainment called "Flora's Festival," as soon as the proper practice can be had, and from the well known success of Mr. Felt, in this vicinity, we have no doubt it will be a grand affair, and we trust that all our young friends will avail themselves of the opportunity for practice in the delightful art of singing.

TERIBLE SUFFERING. A party of Mormons, en route from the United States to California, during the last winter, suffered almost incredibly from hunger. Nineteen of them started to cross the mountains into the California valley, but seven only succeeded in reaching their destination. The rest died, and the survivors were kept alive by eating their dead bodies. Two young girls were among the survivors. A party had been sent back with provisions for the remainder, who had not crossed the mountains.

SLAVERY IN MASSACHUSETTS. It having been recently asserted that slavery was abolished in this State by accident—referring to the decision of Judge Sedgwick on a slave case brought before him, that slavery was abolished by the adoption of the Bill of Rights—Rev. Dr. Lowell states in the Boston Courier, that so far is the abolition of slavery in Massachusetts from being the result of accident, that his father, the late Judge Lowell, who was one of the Committee on that subject—introduced the clause on which the decision of Judge Sedgwick was based—for the express purpose of settling the question about slavery in this State, and that as soon as the Constitution was adopted, he declared that every black in the State was free; and offered his services, gratuitously, to any such person whose right to freedom was contested.

DEATH OF THUNDERBOLT. This celebrated English robber, the companion of the notorious Lightfoot, died recently in Brattleboro', (Vt.) according to the Barre Patriot, which gives the following account of him.

He had been a resident of that place a number of years, and enjoyed much celebrity as a skillful physician. During his last illness he refused to be undressed, and when near his end hired two men in attendance, to bury him in his clothes, just as he died, a contract which was not fulfilled on his part in consequence of the resistance of his neighbors who were desirous of giving his remains a more decent and befitting burial.

On removing his clothes, previous to his being laid out, the cause of this eccentric desire of his was manifest—the withered leg and cork heel, the shot marks, and the scar which witnessed a previous attempt at suicide—precisely as laid down in Lightfoot's description of him, marked him as the Thunderbolt who had gained such notoriety in England and in this country, as one of the most daring and successful highwaymen that has graced the annals of crime. On his person were also found a dirk and pistol, and among his effects, arms of all descriptions, together with watches, diamonds, jewelry, etc., to an enormous value packed away in saw dust. He always went dressed in three suits of clothes, to make his figure look portly, and to prevent recognition, and his withered leg was found wound with cloths to make it appear of the size of the other.

FATAL ACCIDENT. A little boy of Lynn, was killed, on Monday afternoon last, at Dorchester Upper Mills, where he was, with his mother, on a visit. While playing with another boy, he went up to a pair of oxen attached to a cart, put his hand on the leg of one of the oxen, upon which the animal kicked him over—and at the same time, the team starting, the wheel of the cart passed over his head, injuring him so severely that he died shortly afterwards.

An editor out west heads his list of marriages with "noose items"—another calls them "feats of the ring."

Three male infants were baptised in a Presbyterian church at Rochester recently. Their mothers were sisters, the officiating minister was their brother, assisted by their father. Besides the eight adults who took part in the service, there were twenty of the same family present on the occasion.

Champooing and Hair-Cutting.

WILLIAM E. AMBUSH, WOULD respectfully inform the Ladies and Gentlemen of Quincy, that he has constantly on hand a new and unequalled

CHAMPOOING MIXTURE, far superior to the far famed Bogle Hyperion, which when scientifically applied, renders the Hair soft and pliable and imparts to it a peculiar gloss, a flexibility which cannot be obtained from any other combination.

He would also recommend the application of his superior Hair Mixture to those afflicted with cutaneous diseases, to which may be attributed the loss of hair, especially by the young. It is a stimulant to and nourishes the growth of the hair, quickly restores the scalp to a healthy condition which must be accomplished before the hair will make its appearance. It is the great desideratum of the age.

Ladies wishing this application will be waited upon at their residences by W. E. Ambush, by leaving orders at his Emporium, Souther's Building, Quincy. N. B. CHILDREN'S hair cut at their residences at half price.

POETRY.

For the Quincy Patriot.
A YANKEE NOTION.
Think not because we're Yankees born
We love no other nation,
Or that we look with jealous scorn
On those in lower station;
We prize our liberty;
And bravely we'll defend it;
But then to other lands, d'y see,
We'd really like to send it.
So push about the Yankee toast,
Here's luck to all creation;
For tho' we love our own the most
We've love for every nation.

And firstly, there's our Father Land,
With all its faults unnumbered;
It makes us feel a little grand
To think how we descended;
For little we like her well,
The while she keeps in order,
But then she most n't think to tell
Of cap'ring round the border.
We give the hand to gallant France,
And wish her comfort doubled;
For us she raised her victor lance,
When we were sort o' troubled.
Of Bonaparte, the coward's spoil,
The idd France expelled,
His ashes yet shall guard the soil
His courage long protected.
To Spain and Holland both we owe
A well-remembered favor,
And towards them both I guess we'll show
The proper kind o' favor.
But when folks make a duced fuss
'Bout who shall be their ruler,
We kindly tell them, copy us
And keep a little cooler.

Of Belgium I little know,
But far she needs defending;
Alike she bleeds from friend and foe
When Europe is contending.
Ah, when will men compassion learn
From him whose blood has freed them?
The bad his heav'nly precepts spurn,
The best too little heed them.

Of Germany, the learned and vain,
I scarce know where to find her;
She's such a kind o' tangled skein
'Tis a puzzle to unwind her;
I only guess she would be free
If it should come in fashion;
But make the cry of liberty
And Germany would dash on.

The Switzer, from his mountain field,
Looks proudly o'er the valley;
Here Freedom lifts her jeweled shield,
And here her children rally.
The sea may o'er her valleys roll,
Her mountains be dismembered,
But while there lives one free-born soul
Brave Tell shall be remembered.

How long, Italia, oh how long
Shall silken chains confine thee?
Awake to Freedom's rousing song,
And let not sloth supine thee!
I never yet have been in Rome,
Tho' long the Pope has waited;
He favors kissing—I do some,
This proves we are related.
But if I should a cunning go,
Perhaps 'twould move his laughter,
For if he offered me his toe,
To kiss I'd tell him "Father, no!"
I'd rather kiss your daughter.

How fares it, brother Ishmael?
The gallant desert rove?
As free as is the wild gazelle,
And jealous as a lover.
Proud France can never conquer thee,
Tho' half the world abet her;
Brave Ishmael's armed hand is free,
And spurs the Gallic fetter.

In Egypt something you may trace
Of those who used to fool her;
"The kingdom always will be base,"
Whatever Chief may rule it.
Of plagues before they had their share,
Sufficient to content 'em,
They've now the Lion and the Bear,
I guess that mummion sent 'em.

Of Greece I hardly dare to note
Since I have heard a rumor,
A fellow lived there once who wrote,
I think his name was Homer;
And as he was a fighting chap,
And something sort o' knowing,
I fear his ghost might burst its trap
And give my muse a blowing.

Of Turkey—what a Yankee name,
And coupled with thanksgiving—
Their fellows, to a chick, are game,
So let them have a living.
Of Mahomet they long have dream'd,
Their idol and their terror,
But when the press their brains has steam'd
They'll wake and find their error.

The Indies, heaven defend the mark,
John Bull, what are you doing?
You've scarcely left them half a sark,
I fear you'll prove their ruin;
Not all the wealth in all their mines
Can satisfy their craving;
Beneath your rule all India pines,
You play the devil at shaving.

The Great Celestial Emperor
Is vex'd with you terrestrial!
V'y Vic, v'y v'ot a v'ich you are
To ver with the Celestials!
They do not like your nasty drug,
*England. *Russia. *Oplum.

PRACTICAL JOKES & BAD LIQUOR.

It is a well known fact that oftentimes both those jokes which are called "practical," and that liquor which is termed "bad," have been productive of exceedingly evil consequences;—but whether the liquor of the joke has done the most mischief, we are not called upon just now to determine. We propose to make mention of an affair where bad liquor and a practical joke were productive of the very best consequences imaginable.

Many years ago, while the State of Georgia was still in its infancy, an eccentric creature, named Brown, was one of our Circuit Judges. He was a man of considerable ability, of inflexible integrity, and much beloved and respected by all the legal profession, but he had one common fault. His social qualities would lead him, despite his judgment, into frequent excesses. In travelling the Circuit it was almost his invariable habit, the night before opening the Court, to get "comfortably corned," by means of appliances common upon such occasions. If he couldn't succeed while operating on his own hook, the members of the bar would generally turn in and help him.

It was in the spring of the year; taking his wife—a model of a woman in her way—in the old fashioned, but strong "carryall," that he journeyed some forty miles, and reached a village where "Court" was to be opened next day. It was along in the evening of Sunday, that he arrived at the place, and took up his quarters with a relation of his "better half," by whom the presence of an official dignitary was considered a singular honor. After supper, Judge Brown strolled over to the only tavern in the town, where he found many old friends, called to the place, like himself, on important professional business, and who were properly glad to meet him.

"Gentlemen," said the Judge, "it's quite a long time since we have enjoyed a glass together—let us take a glass all round. Of course Stieritt, (addressing the landlord) you have better liquor than you had the last time we were here—the stuff you had then was not fit for a dog."

Stieritt, who had charge of the house, pretended that every thing was right, and so they went to work. It is unnecessary to enlarge upon a drinking bout in a country tavern—it will quite answer our purpose to state that somewhere towards midnight, the Judge wended his very devious way towards his temporary home. About the time he was leaving, however, some young barristers, fond of a "practical," and not much afraid of the bench, transferred all the silver spoons of Stieritt to the Judge's coat pocket.

It was eight o'clock on Monday morning that the Judge arose. Having indulged in the process of abstinence, and abstinence, and partaken of a cheerful and refreshing breakfast, he went to his room to prepare himself for the duties of the day.

"Well, Polly," said he to his wife, "I feel much better than I expected to feel after that frolic last night."

"Ah! Judge," said she respectfully, "you are getting too old—you ought to leave off that business."

"Ah! Polly, what's the use of talking," said the Judge.

It was at this precise instant of time, that the Judge having put on his overscoat, was proceeding, according to his usual custom, to give his wife a parting kiss, that he happened, in thrusting his hand into his pocket, to lay hold of Stieritt's spoons. He jerked them out. With an exclamation of horror almost indescribable, he exclaimed—

"My God! Polly!"

"What on earth's the matter, Judge?" asked his wife.

PRACTICAL JOKES & BAD LIQUOR.

It is a well known fact that oftentimes both those jokes which are called 'practical,' and that liquor which is termed 'bad,' have been productive of exceedingly evil consequences;—but whether the liquor or the joke has done the most mischief, we are not called upon just now to determine. We propose to make mention of an affair where bad liquor and a practical joke were productive of the very best consequences imaginable.

Many years ago, while the State of Georgia was still in its infancy, an eccentric creature, named Brown, was one of our Circuit Judges. He was a man of considerable ability, of inflexible integrity, and much beloved and respected by all the legal profession, but he had one common fault. His social qualities would lead him, despite his judgment, into frequent excesses.

In travelling the Circuit it was almost his invariable habit, the night before opening the Court, to get 'comfortably corned,' by means of appliances common upon such occasions. If he couldn't succeed while operating on his own hook, the members of the bar would generally turn in and help him.

It was in the spring of the year; taking his wife—a model of a woman in her way—in the old fashioned, but strong 'carryall,' that he journeyed some forty miles, and reached a village where 'Court' was to be opened next day. It was along in the evening of Sunday, that he arrived at the place, and took up his quarters with a relation of his 'better half,' by whom the presence of an official dignitary was considered a singular honor. After supper, Judge Brown strolled over to the only tavern in the town, where he found many old friends, called to the place, like himself, on important professional business, and who were properly glad to meet him.

'Gentlemen,' said the Judge, 'it's quite a long time since we have enjoyed a glass together—let us take a glass all round. Of course Sterritt, (addressing the landlord) you have better liquor than you had the last time we were here—the stuff you had then was not fit for a dog.'

Sterritt, who had charge of the house, pretended that every thing was right, and so they went to work. It is unnecessary to enlarge upon a drinking bout in a country tavern—it will quite answer our purpose to state that somewhere towards midnight, the Judge wended his very devious way towards his temporary home. About the time he was leaving, however, some young barristers, fond of a 'practical,' and not much afraid of the bench, transferred all the silver spoons of Sterritt to the Judge's coat pocket.

It was eight o'clock on Monday morning that the Judge arose. Having indulged in the process of abstinence, and abstention, and partaken of a cheerful and refreshing breakfast, he went to his room to prepare himself for the duties of the day.

'Well, Polly,' said he to his wife, 'I feel much better than I expected to feel after that frolic last night.'

'Ah! Judge,' said she respectfully, 'you are getting too old—you ought to leave off that business.'

'Ah! Polly, what's the use of talking,' said the Judge.

It was at this precise instant of time, that the Judge having put on his overcoat, was proceeding, according to his usual custom, to give his wife a parting kiss, that he happened, in thrusting his hand into his pocket, to lay hold of Sterritt's spoons. He jerked them out. With an exclamation of horror almost indescribable, he exclaimed—

'My God! Polly!'

'What on earth's the matter, Judge?' asked his wife.

'Just look at these spoons.'

'Dear me, where d'ye get them?'

'Get them? Don't you see the initials on them?' extending them towards her, 'I stole them!'

'Stole them, Judge?'

'Yes, stole them!'

'My dear husband it can't be possible! from whom?'

'From Sterritt, over there—his name is on them.'

'Good heavens! how could it happen?'

'I know very well, Polly—I was very drunk when I came home, wasn't I?'

'Why, Judge, you know your old habit when you get among those lawyers.'

'But was I very drunk?'

'Yes, you was!'

'Was I remarkably drunk when I got home, Mrs. Brown?'

'Yes, Judge, drunk as a fool, and forty times as stupid.'

'I thought so,' said the Judge, dropping into a chair in extreme despondency.—'I knew it would come to that at last. I have always thought that something bad would happen to me—that I should do something very wrong—kill somebody in a moment of passion, perhaps—but I never imagined that I could be mean enough to be guilty of deliberate larceny.'

'But there may be some mistake judge,' remarked his wife.

'No mistake, Polly. I know very well how it all came about. That fellow, Sterritt, keeps the meanest sort of liquor, and always did—liquor mean enough to make a man do any sort of a mean thing. I have always said it is mean enough to make a man steal, and now I have a practical illustration of the fact,—and the poor old man burst into tears.

'Don't be a child,' said his wife wiping away his tears, 'go, like a man, over to Sterritt, tell him it was a little bit of a frolic—pass it off as a joke—go and open Court, and nobody will ever think of it again.'

A little of the soothing system operated upon the Judge, as such things usually do; his extreme mortification was finally subdued, and over to Sterritt's he went with a tolerable face. Of course, he had but little difficulty in settling with him—far aside from the fact that the Judge's integrity was unquestionable, he had an inkling of the joke that had been played. The Judge took his seat in Court, but it was observed that he was sad and melancholy, and that his mind frequently wandered from the business before him. There was a lack of the sense and intelligence, that usually characterized his proceedings.

Several days passed away, and the business before the Court was drawing towards a close, when one morning, a rough looking sort of a customer was arraigned on a charge of stealing. After the clerk had read the indictment to him, he put the question to him:—

'Guilty, or not guilty?'

'Guilty—but drunk!' answered the prisoner.

'What's that plea?' exclaimed the Judge, who was half dozing on the bench.

'He pleads guilty, but says he was drunk,' replied the clerk.

'What's the charge against the man?'

'He is indicted for grand larceny.'

'What's the case?'

'May it please your honor,' said the prosecuting Attorney, 'the man is regularly indicted for stealing a large sum from the Columbus Hotel.'

'He is, eh?' and he pleads—'

'Guilty—but drunk.'

The Judge was now fully aroused.

'Guilty, but drunk! that is a most extraordinary plea. Young man, are you certain you were drunk?'

'Yes, sir.'

'Where did you get the liquor?'

'At Sterritt's.'

'D'ye get none no where else?'

'Not a drop, sir.'

'You got drunk on his liquor, and afterwards stole his money?'

'Yes, sir.'

'Mr. Prosecutor,' said the Judge, 'do me the favor to enter a nolle prosequi in that man's case. The liquor of Sterritt's is mean enough to make a man do anything dirty. I got drunk on it the other day myself, and stole all of Sterritt's spoons,—release the prisoner, Mr. Sheriff. I adjourn the Court.'

THE CORSET.

This instrument of torture is not of modern invention. More than one poet of antiquity has reproached his countrywomen with its employment. The Greek ladies had their strophion, and the Roman matrons their castula, a kind of small tunic, which was fastened around the waist. According to Ovid, (Fasti iv. 147.) the corset would seem to have been in as great request among the Roman girls as among our own. Yet women of other nations reject this article of dress with advantage. Lady W. Montague observes, that nothing can be more admirable than the forms of the Turkish ladies, who regarded her corset as a machine in which she had been enclosed by her husband, and whence she could not extricate herself. The Spanish women, also celebrated for the elegant contour of their shapes, do not employ the corset. It was only during the lifetime of Catharine de Medicis, that the custom of wearing the tightened corset was introduced into France.

Some women have discontinued this article of dress, whether from fancy or necessity, without sustaining any inconvenience. It is the long habit of wearing it which deceives most. Without it, they do not seem dressed—as if something were wanting. This may be so for the first day or two of the experiment, but at the end of a fortnight the loss would not be perceived; just as in the case of a ring long worn on the finger, or any other object habitually employed. Many young women, obliged to renounce this strange article of the toilet, have quickly found their health improve. The blood has then been allowed free circulation; the lungs full expansion, and the free movements permitted to them, have soon re-produced and preserved the health, animated complexion, the principal beauty of the young, but which they so rarely possess in large towns. Surely the preservation of health is of more consequence than its retention of those pieces of whalebone! If a young woman, with the most beautiful form and richest portion, does not possess health, adieu to happiness and pleasure, for her life is strewn with thorns. Exemption from suffering is almost everything in our rapid and short passage through life; but to suffer from our own fault, because we have desired it—is this not deserving the chastisement which we have braved, but which awaits us?

What is most singular is, that women are aware of the injuriousness of the corset—they instinctively feel that its action is an unnatural and eminently hurtful one. Here is the proof. If, by accident, a lady falls ill in a crowded assembly of any kind, a general cry is raised by the others, 'Cut her lace!' This is done instantly—the compressing machine is opened, air rushes into the lungs, the victim breathes and recovers; which, however, will not prevent her recommending the next day; so inexorable and powerful is this malicious demon-fashion.

CIGAR SMOKING.

One of the most expensive habits, estimating it by its return to him, that a man allows himself to acquire and continue the indulgence of, is undoubtedly that of smoking cigars. If it was confined exclusively to the rich, less might be said in condemnation of it, because they can afford it without any sensible effect upon their finances, or involving any deprivation of more useful things or material retarding of other objects; but as it prevails to as great, if not greater extent among those whose resources are more limited, it is an extravagance which merits deprecation. We shall therefore speak with respect to the latter more particularly. Judging from observation we should estimate the number of cigars consumed per diem by habitual smokers at four or five on the average, which at three cents each, the price of good cigars, amount to something like forty dollars per annum! Just think of that, reader, forty dollars a year for a number of little cylindrical rolls of tobacco whose end is smoke! Forty dollars a year expended for nothing but a most evanescent gratification and nothing more substantial than a nauseating taste and so much blue smoke, whose graceful curls are dispelled as soon as evolved! To discern its effects better, take an individual addicted to this habit, whose occupation yields him an income of but five hundred dollars a year—what an item is this forty dollars to be subtracted therefrom! It would nearly pay the rent of his house, or clothe himself or his wife handsomely—would at least clothe several of his children, or contribute materially towards defraying many other of his most necessary expenses, and to make his living so much the more easy and comfortable; besides obviating the sense of anxiety otherwise attendant on his constant efforts to make two ends meet; or if a person of cultivated tastes and desirous of their gratification, how much would not this contribute towards it, although possessed of such restricted means? If fond of collecting books, in a very few years no inconsiderable library might be formed; so too with regard to many other objects or useful purposes. It would be well for those who are about acquiring this habit to estimate its expense first, and the little compensation experienced from it. Perhaps it would be forty or fifty dollars a year saved to them.—Woburn Guide Post.

THE ORIGIN OF WINE. Jerusheed, the founder of Persepolis, is by Persian writers said to have been the first who invented wine. He was immoderately fond of grapes, and desiring to preserve some, they were placed for this purpose in a large vessel, and lodged in a vault for future use. When the vessel was opened the grapes had fermented and their juice in this state was so acid that the king believed it must be poisonous. He had some vessels filled with it; 'poison' was written upon each and they were placed in his room.

It happened that one of his favorite ladies was affected with a nervous headache, and the pain distracted her so much that she desired death. Observing a vessel with 'poison' written on it she took it and swallowed its contents. The wine, for such it had become, overcame the lady, who fell into a sound sleep and awoke much refreshed. Delighted with the remedy, she repeated the dose so often that the monarch's poison was all drunk. He soon discovered this, and forced the lady to confess what she had done. A quantity of wine was made, and Jerusheed and all his court drank of the new beverage—which from the circumstance that led to its discovery, is this day known in Persia by the name of Jeher-e-Kooshon, the delightful poison!

FARMING.

In the Law Reporter, for one month, there are one hundred and forty two bankrupts, who have taken the benefit of the chancery law, of whom thirty three are merchants and traders, quite a number are 'gentlemen,' but only three are farmers. Yet the number of farmers in this State is much greater than that of merchants. Is it not strange, then, that there is so general a desire, on the part of young men to get into mercantile life, with all its hazards, its distracting cares and disappointments, while there is so prevalent a distaste for the healthful, quiet and comparatively safe business of farming?

The reasons of this common error are to be found, doubtless, in the false glosses, and colorings which are thrown around the two employments. The merchant carries about him the appearance of competence, if not of wealth, even when he is obliged to resort to all manner of expedients to keep himself from bankruptcy; while the farmer, when employed in the business of his vocation, may easily be mistaken in his plain garb, for a poor man.

Then there are a few merchants, who from small beginnings, have become wealthy, and now count their property by millions. The aspiring youth looks at these, and is dazzled by the flattering inducements held out to him; forgetting that for one such instance of brilliant success, there are hundreds who make repeated and disastrous failures, and at last end their days in poverty, or perhaps in disgrace.

Of all the employments in which men may honorably engage, there is no one so free from temptation, from anxiety and from sudden pecuniary disaster, as that of the farmer; no one so favorable to the healthful development of all the powers of the body, and all the faculties of the soul. The farmer communes directly with nature. He is always employed among the works of God. The soil, the plants, the trees, the seeds, are presented to him as they came from the Creator's hand. He sees everywhere the handiwork of God. In every seed that germinates, in every bud that bursts from its wintry prison, in every flower that opens its bosom to the sunshine, or sips the morning dew, he sees a fresh proof of the untrifling agency of the ever present, ever acting God who 'worketh all in all'; who teaches by the humble lily of the vale, or by the huge mountain oak, whose sturdy trunk has defied the fury of a hundred winters, by the gentle breeze of Spring, or the wild tornado, by the silent twinkling star or the wild thunderbolt.

Young man, leave your vain aspirations after wealth, and be a farmer. Court a vigorous frame, an active mind, and a contented spirit, more than money. Seek happiness in faithfully tilling the soil, and you will find it far superior to that which flows from the possession of money.

TOBACCO.

Tobacco is the servant of Alcohol and illness. He is a shallow, ill-favored, lazy, good-for-nothing fellow. Some pretend he is a dentist, and cures the tooth-ache. Beautiful work he makes of it! the mouth where he has operated with a beautiful place for pearls. The breath how balmy! But for a dentist he is a great while at it. He is a travelling dentist. You can hardly step into a tavern or an office, without stumbling over some of the beautiful basins which he keeps for his patients to spit in.

There is an alkali existing in the leaves of tobacco called Nicotian which is of which in its pure state would be fatal to animal life. This is not half the story. The poisonous principle in tobacco is fatal to the consumer sooner or later. And although an iron constitution may withstand its deleterious effects for a long time, as they do other abuses, yet the retribution will come. It is no argument to point out an old sinner, who has lived out his three score and ten years in spite of rum and tobacco, for such a man of temperate habits, would be hale and vigorous at one hundred, as we see occasional instances of. Dr. Holyoke, who died some years since at Boston, who was an active man at the age of one hundred, and the medical men of that city met and celebrated his centennial anniversary. On that occasion he alluded to his mode of living—the avoidance of hurtful substances—temperance without rigid abstinence—healthy exercise and cheerfulness—to which he ascribes his longevity. A long catalogue of similar instances might be cited, which have a strong contrast with their opposite.

DEFINITION OF PLEASURE. It is difficult to say what pleasure means. Pleasure bears a different sense to every person. Pleasure to a school boy means—trying a string to his school-fellow's foot when he is asleep, and pulling it till he awakes him. Pleasure to a man of an inquiring mind—means a toad inside a stone, or a beetle running with its head off. Pleasure to a fine lady means—having something to do to drive away the blues. Pleasure to an antiquarian means—an illegible inscription. Pleasure to a connoisseur means—a dark, invisible, very fine picture. Pleasure to a philosopher, a modern philosopher, means—liking nothing, despising every, and proving every one a simpleton except himself. Pleasure to the sweetest of all tempers—the last word in an argument. Pleasure to the social—the human face divine. Pleasure to the morose—I shant see a soul for the next six months. Pleasure to an author—the last page of his manuscript. Pleasure to the printer—I've called to pay you for my paper.

ADVICE TO YOUNG WOMEN.

Trust not to uncertain riches, but prepare yourself for every emergency in life. Learn to work, and not to depend upon servants to make your bread; sweep your floors and darn your own stockings. Above all things, do not esteem too lightly those honorable young men who sustain themselves and their aged parents by the work of their own hands, while you care for and receive into your company those lazy popinjays, who never lift a finger to help themselves, so long as they can keep body and soul together, and get sufficient to live in fashion. If you are wise you will look at this subject as we do; and when you are old enough to become wives, you will prefer the honest mechanic, with not a cent to commence life, to the fashionable loafer, with a capital of ten thousand dollars. Whenever we hear remarked, 'Such a young lady has married a fortune,' we always tremble for her prosperity. Riches left to children by wealthy parents, often turn a curse instead of a blessing. Young women remember this, and instead of sounding the purses of your lovers, and examining the cut of their coat, look into their habits and hearts. Mark if they have trades and can depend upon themselves; see if they have minds which will lead them to look above a butterfly existence. Talk not of the beautiful white skin and the soft delicate hand—the splendid form and the fine appearance of the young gentleman. Let not these considerations throng your thoughts.

THE OLD MAN AND HIS YOUTH.

Geron, an old man of eighty years, was one day sitting before the door of his rustic dwelling, enjoying the bright and cheerful autumn morning. His eye rested now upon the blue hills in the distance, from whose tops the mist was stealing upward, like the smoke of burnt offerings, and now upon his mirthful grandchildren, who were sporting around him.

A youth from the city now approached the old man, and entered into discourse with him. When the youth heard the number of his years from his own lips, he wondered at his vigorous age and his ruddy countenance. Whereupon he asked the old man whence it came that he enjoyed such strength and cheerfulness in the late autumn of life.

Geron answered: 'My son, these, like every other good thing, are gifts which come to us from above, the merit of which we cannot claim to ourselves, and still we can do something here below, to enable us to obtain them.'

Having uttered these words, the old man arose, and led the stranger into his orchard, and showed him the tall and noble trees, covered with delicious fruit, the sight of which gladdened the heart.

Then the old man spoke. 'Dost thou wonder also that I now enjoy the fruit of these trees? See, my son, I planted them in my youth; thou hast the secret of my happy and fruitful old age.'

The youth cast a look full of meaning upon the old man, for he understood his words, and treasured them up in his heart.—Krummacher.

THE SEASON. Gen. H. A. S. Dearborn, now Mayor of Roxbury, furnishes, in the Boston Transcript, the following account of the period of the blooming of the cherry trees, for a number of years, in order to show that the present is not a remarkably backward season:

In 1835, cherry trees began to bloom	May 17

Once within the thirty seven years that I have lived in Roxbury (says Gen. Dearborn) the cherry trees began to show blossoms on the 19th of April, and I think it was between 1825 and 1832 but I have not any record of the year. At the time, upon remarking to Dr. Prentiss of that place, the remarkably early florescence of the cherry trees, he stated that on the 19th of April,

GEN. TOM THUMB. This far famed miniature edition of humanity is now holding his levees at the Boston Museum, see advertisement. Kimball, the gentlemanly proprietor of the Museum, is uniting in his search for novelties to gratify and please the public, and he certainly deserves a bountiful return at their hands for his very successful labors. Among all the places of amusement to be found in the city, none will afford more satisfaction to the visitor, combining, as it does, the instructive with the amusing. Our readers should bear in mind that this is the last opportunity they will have of making the acquaintance of General Thumb, the man who has visited kings and queens, and boasts of having kissed thousands of ladies, as he retires to private life after visiting some of our principal cities.

ARMY NEWS. Vera Cruz dates to the 25th ult. have been received. Com. Perry had captured a host of little towns on the coast, and was about to attack Tobacco, where the enemy was two thousand strong. Vera Cruz has nearly recovered from the effects of the siege. The people were returning, and the activity of a sea port was displayed.

Advices from Mexico to the 19th ult. have been received. It is stated that Santa Anna had given up the command of the army to assume the duties of President; that the rumored election of Herrera was incorrect. Another account states that Santa Anna entered the capital on the 19th, and was greeted by the populace with a shower of curses and pelted with stones. He escaped with much difficulty, and sought an asylum in the palace.

The American squadron, of six or eight vessels, were off Mazatlan, and a thousand men were to disembark to take the town.

Our Pacific squadron is busy upon the western ports of Mexico.

A letter from Monterey, dated May 15th, says Gen. Taylor intended to start, on the first of June, for San Luis Potosi, where a battle was expected.

ARTILLERY ELECTION. The Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company celebrated their two hundred and ninth anniversary, in Boston, on Monday last. A portion of the Executive Council, State Treasurer, and members of the city government were in attendance, and, accompanied by Flagg's Brass Band, escorted the Company from the State House to the church in Chancery Place, where the usual discourse was delivered by Rev. William P. Lunt of this town, from texts found in Numbers, xxvii. 20, and Hebrews, iii. 1. The discourse is highly spoken of. The company dined at Faneuil Hall and then marched to the Common, where the ceremony of giving out the new commissions was performed by Hon. John P. Bigelow, member of the Council, the Governor being sick and the Lieutenant Governor absent from the State.

HOWITZER. This term is not generally understood, except by military men. A cotemporary describes it as a short field piece, constructed on the principle of a mortar, but mounted on a gun carriage. Like a mortar it has an interior chamber for the powder charge. The bore is then larger, and admits of a small shell. To this shell is attached canister shot. It is used and fired in the field like mounted cannon. The shells are fired like cannon balls, and when they explode they scatter the grape shot in every direction. To be used then on the road, or from hills, or in defiles, against troops, they are a most destructive weapon. This is the use they are put to in Mexico.

GIDDING TREES. We have been informed that a valuable fruit tree on the premises of Dea. George Baxter of this town, has been secretly girdled for some unknown purpose. There is a too prevalent disposition by many to commit an injury by which they imagine to avenge themselves of a supposed wrong. This course is a direct violation of all laws, and every one should exert themselves to bring such offenders to justice.

"MARKING DOWN." We invite attention to the advertisement of George W. Warren & Co., Boston, to be found in this week's number. We are well assured that this "marking down" system is no humbug, with them, and that goods can be bought at their establishment at greatly reduced prices. Of the great variety of goods to be found there and the polite attention of the salesmen it is unnecessary to speak. Ladies will doubtless improve the opportunity.

LARGE WOMAN. A woman recently died in this town, whose weight was upwards of three hundred pounds. Her coffin measured thirty two inches in width, and was so large that the corpse had to be taken out of the house to be placed in it, neither the doors or windows being wide enough to admit it.

COUNTERFEIT DETECTOR. We have received the June number of Willis & Co's Bank Note List and Counterfeit Detector. It is issued monthly by Thomas Groom, Stationer, 82 State Street, Boston, at one dollar and fifty cents per annum or twelve and a half cents per single copy, and printed in Dickinson's best style. It contains all the matter usually found in works of this description and is doubtless a very useful and valuable publication.

FIRE IN SCITUATE. A two story dwelling-house in Scituate, owned and occupied by Theodore and William Turner, was burnt with most of its contents on the 5th inst., as we learn from the Plymouth Rock.

BLASTING WITH GUN COTTON. Some very successful attempts have been made recently in blasting rocks near Liverpool, (Eng.) The greatest success attended the operations, large blocks of stone being removed by the cotton, whereas the gunpowder broke it into comparatively small pieces. In one instance, a mass of stone, almost fourteen tons weight, was removed by six ounces of gun cotton; and in another instance a large mass of stone was severed from the rock by eight ounces of cotton, a much smaller quantity being displaced by a charge of two and a half pounds of gunpowder. The Scientific gentlemen who witnessed the operations, decided at once upon the superiority of gun cotton in removing large masses of stone.

A WISE REGULATION. The Selectmen of Wiscasset, (Me.) have published an order for the police officers of that town, to arrest as vagrants, all boys loitering about the streets during school hours. They must either 'attend school, or devote their time, with diligence, to some lawful employment.' An excellent regulation, which should be adopted in every town.

THE NEXT CROP. The Cincinnati (Ohio) Times, says that thousands of acres in the West have been plowed and sown this year, which have never before been cultivated, and present indications are favorable for a heavy harvest.

Amos Lawrence, Esq. of Boston, has recently made another donation to this College, of two thousand dollars for the purpose of founding four scholarships, and one thousand dollars to be expended in the erection of a fountain in front of Lawrence Hall, and in fitting up bathing rooms for the students.

DIVIDEND. The directors of the Old Colony Railroad, have declared a semi-annual dividend of three dollars per share, payable on the 1st of July.

ANTI-SLAVERY MEETINGS. An Anti-Slavery meeting will be held in East Abington, on Saturday evening, June 19th, and addressed by J. C. Hathaway and C. L. Remond. Another meeting will be held, on the same evening, in the Universalist Church in Centre Abington, and addressed by F. Douglas, W. W. Brown, and J. N. Buffum. On Sunday, June 20th, (day and evening), an Anti-Slavery Convention will be held in the Town hall, Abington, which will be addressed by all the Speakers above named.

WHAT WOULD YANKEES DO? In the pocket ship Washington Irving, which sailed from Boston last Saturday, as we learn from the Barnstable Patriot, went passenger a young Shoemaker from Quincy, under contract for one year, to take charge of a shoe factory in Liverpool, to instruct the operatives in the making of pegged shoes and boots—an art they do not understand in England yet.

This young Yankee will make his fortune out of John Bull.

FIRE AT WEST RANDOLPH. There was quite a serious fire last Monday night, at West Randolph. A house and two barns were burnt. It is said to have been the work of an incendiary.

ROUGH AND READY HALL. Our readers are reminded that the Messrs. Savil, of this town, have opened an establishment under this title which is not far behind the famous Oak Hall, Boston.

The total amount imported during the year, up to the first of June, was 60,751 barrels whale, 242,364 do. sperm oil, and 2,252,238 pounds of bone.

WILLIAM E. AMBUSH,

WOULD respectfully inform the Ladies and Gentlemen of Quincy, that he has constantly on hand a new and unequalled far superior to the far famed Eagle Hyperion, which when scientifically applied, renders the Hair soft and pliable and imparts to it a peculiar gloss, a flexibility which cannot be obtained from any other combination.

CHAMPOOING MIXTURE,

He would also recommend the application of his superior Hair Mixture to those afflicted with cutaneous diseases, which may be attributed the loss of hair, especially by the young. SOW THY SEED.

In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand; for thou knowest not whether shall prosper either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good.—Eccles. xi. 6.

In the morning sow thy seed,
Nor at eve withhold thy hand,
Who can tell which may succeed,
Or if both alike shall stand,
And a glorious harvest bear
To reward the sower's care.

In the morning sow thy seed;—
In the morning of thy youth;
Prompt to every generous deed,
Scatter wide the seeds of truth;
He whose sun may set at noon
Never can begin too soon!

Nor withhold thy willing hand
In the eventide of age,
E'en to life's last lingering sand,
In thy closing pilgrimage,
Send may yet be sown by thee,
Sown for immortality!

'By all waters,' be it known—
Every where enrich the ground,
Till the soil, with thorns & o'er grown,
Shall with fruits and flowers abound,
Pregnant with a sweet perfume,
Decked in Eden's loveliest bloom!

Sow it in the youthful mind:
Can you have a fairer field?
Be it but in faith consigned,
Harvest, doubtless, it should yield,
Fruits of early piety,
All that God delights to see,

Sow it on the waters wide,
Where the seamen ploughs the deep;
Then, with every flowing tide,
You blessed fruit shall reap,
And the thoughtless sailors prove
Trophy to the cause you love.

Sow it 'mid the crowded street—
Lanes and alleys, dark and foul,
Where the teeming masses meet—
Each with an immortal soul,
Sunk in deepest moral gloom,
Reckless of the coming doom.

Sow it 'mid the haunts of vice—
Scenes of infamy and crime;
Suddenly, may paradise
Burst, as in the northern clime,
Spring, with all its verdant race,
Starts from Winter's cold embrace.

Sow it with unsparring hand,
'Tis the Kingdom's precious seed;
'Tis the Master's great command,
And his grace shall crown the deed;
He hath said, the precious grain
Never shall be sown in vain!

Long, indeed, beneath the clod,
It may lie, forgot, unseen—
Noxious weeds may clothe the sod;
Changing seasons intervene,
Summer's heat and Winter's frost—
Yet that seed shall never be lost.

But, at length, it shall appear,
Rising up o'er all the plain—
'First the blade and then the ear,'
Then the ripe and golden grain;
Joyous reapers gladly come,
Angels shout the harvest home.

I NEVER COULD SEE A GOOD REASON.

I never could find a good reason,
Why sorrow unbidden should stay,
And all the bright joys of life's season,
Be driven unheeded away.
Our cares would wake no more emotion,
Were we to our lot but resign'd,
Than pebbles flung into the ocean,
That leave scarce a ripple behind.

The world has a spirit of beauty,
Which looks upon all for the best,
And while it discharges its duty,
To Providence leaves all the rest;
That spirit's the beam of devotion,
Which lights us through life to its close
And sets like the sun in the ocean,
More beautiful far than it rose.

ANECDOTES.

'Do you think Jonah cried when he was in the fish's belly?' was the question put to an oily seaman by a sleek quaker. 'Don't know,' replied Jack, 'but should think not, as there was plenty of blubber without his'n.'

'Shouldn't you know this was my son to look at him?' asked a man of his neighbor.
'Yes,' was the reply, 'the maker's name is stamped upon the blade.'

A conceited young man asked a friend what apology he should make for not being one of the party of the day before, to which he had a card of invitation.
'Oh, my dear sir,' replied the wit, 'say nothing about it, you were never missed.'

A man was brought before a country magistrate, in England, for poaching in the preserved woods.
'So, fellow,' said the worthy justice, 'you've got into a preserve, eh?'
'No, said the man; 'please your worship, I've got into a pickle.'

'Say, nigger,' said one African to another, on the evening of the illumination in New Orleans, 'what be de delamination for?'
'I knows, nigger, jest as well as any white folks but den I shan't enlighten you.'

'Den you keeps dark, don't you nigger?'
Said a girl to her faithless lover—'Richard, why are you like an article of dress?' 'Because you are a false Dickey.'

Said a Dutchman—'Why is a fool like a certain garment?' 'Because he is a great coat.'

MISCELLANY.

PARSON ANDERSON AND HIS SON.

It was a clear, frosty Thanksgiving day. The clock upon a certain village church tolled forth the hour of eleven, as the Reverend Jacob Anderson glanced into a pocket mirror to assure himself that his person and face were in a prayerful trim—slowly elevated his portly figure from behind the crimson velvet hangings of a high and somewhat antique pulpit—took one solemn and deliberate view of the thinly scattered congregation—drew out his long sharp features to still greater length—raised his eyes imploringly to Heaven—spread out his thin, soft white hands as if to embrace in the arms of his paternal love the few representatives of his numerous fold, and in a deep and thrilling tone, uttered the words 'Let us Pray.'

With a simultaneous movement the congregation arose and bent their heads reverently, to unite with their pastor in that prayer which immediately precedes the sermon—a service in which it was supposed that he would exert the utmost power of his eloquence in his fervent pleading with the Almighty.

Parson Anderson commenced; his deep bass voice resounded through his almost vacant church like the subdued peals of distant thunder. In long accustomed and well-measured terms he describes the high and holy object of their adoration—expressed the most unbounded gratitude for the privilege of again offering up their heart's sincere devotion—implored the Divine blessing upon Christians throughout the world, but especially upon those of his own flock—invoked wisdom and strength for the rulers of our beloved and highly enlightened land—desiring that the gospel news of salvation might be spread among the 'slaves of this free and noble country'—and most earnestly besought the Lord to visit with mercy and retributive justice the haunts of poverty, degradation and vice, with which our cities abound.

Here the Reverend gentleman paused from pure necessity; his voice, in the excitement of the hour, had forgotten its solemn and legitimate bass, and ascending step by step—as if during the prayer the Almighty Ear had receded farther and farther from the mouth of the pleader—he had at length terminated a beautifully rounded sentence in a sharp shrill scream. Here as we remarked, he paused, inhaled one long, full breath, and with a canonic of spotless purity, removed the perspiration from his wrinkled brow. And he proceeded.

'We bless thy name, O Lord, that amid the numerous bounties of thy Providence, we are not forgotten; upon this day, especially, open our hearts to feel for the sufferings of the poor, the sick and the forsaken—incline us to seek them in their own homes, to relieve their distress, to console the mourner, to clothe the naked, to feed the hungry, to smile upon the objects of thy compassion, O Lord, and to share equally with them the luxuries which this day affords.'

At this period of the service, a bonnet in the front pew was slightly elevated, and a pair of bright black eyes peeped cautiously round to note the effects of the last sentence, so slowly and emphatically pronounced. Those eyes belonged to the Parson's honored lady, who was noted far and wide for the peculiar and far-reaching shrewdness with which she contrived to take the two ends of her husband's moderate salary.

As usual on Thanksgiving day only a simple and ordinary dinner had been prepared, the fires extinguished, and the good lady with son and daughter had followed the devout preacher to church at an early hour. While inhaling spiritual food so abundantly, she nevertheless reserved a thought for the more worldly luxuries with which she had good reason to know that their wealthy parishioners were supplied, and to which experience had taught her to anticipate an ample share, it was therefore a very natural thing that a pleasant, though somewhat sanctified, smile should creep over her round dimpled face, as she met a few glances quickly thrown from surrounding eyes—assurances that she was not doomed to disappointment.

Among this bowed and worshipping congregation alone—a young man of twenty, the only son of Rev. Jacob Anderson—stood proudly erect, his arms gracefully folded across his broad chest, his glossy black hair, lightly curling, brushed carelessly back from his noble brow, and his large full eyes of sparkling brilliancy, bent earnestly upon his father's face. His falling collar was knotted with a band of dark silk, his frock coat fitted his elegant figure with an easy grace, and his boots were of that degree of polish that indicated self respect rather than extreme anxiety for the world's opinion.

Laurens Anderson had been, for years, deemed a wayward and ungodly son by his rigidly pious father, the narrow compass of whose study could have borne witness to many acts of discipline, both temporal and spiritual, designed to guide his unsteady feet into the narrow and well-beaten track of popular orthodoxy. But, as yet, all those efforts had proved unsuccessful, and Laurens had reached the age and stature of manhood almost purely a child of Nature.

Thoughtful, sagacious, independent of creeds, careless whom he pleased or displeased—but noble, generous and affectionate—he loved to trace out what he conceived to be the numerous inconsistencies between his father's creed and life—his professions in public and his domestic short comings. It was a faithful source of agony to the reverend gentleman to be thus commented on to his face, but neither brute force nor persuasive eloquence had accomplished an iota in checking this leading characteristic of the son, and reprehensible as this might have been in the latter, it was nevertheless frequently effective of good results.

At the close of the long and eloquent petition, a peculiar expression curled the features of the young man, and he sat down with a promptitude which indicated some new and sudden resolve. At length the congregation dispersed to their various homes, and soon the tables of Parson Anderson began to groan beneath the rich presents poured in from every quarter. The Divine was in his study, Mrs. Anderson busy with her kitchen-maid, her daughter entertaining a guest in the parlor, and it fell to the lot of Laurens to receive and arrange these gifts. Without the least hesitation he threw open the door of a large cupboard, tumbled its contents into the smallest possible space, and with a sharp knife quickly severed each article brought, as near the centre as possible, placing one half in the cupboard and the other at the disposal of his mother when the proper time should arrive.

No sooner had these presents ceased to flow in, than Laurens filled an immense basket to overflowing, with his reserved halves, and set forth upon his benevolent errand. Many a lone and sorrowful heart, many a deserted and degraded outcast that day cheered by a morsel from his basket, as with unwearied patience he plunged into the dark alleys, nooks and corners where lived the sons and daughters of poverty. Blessings, were profusely showered upon his head, and his dark lustrous eyes beamed with inward joy as he turned his steps homeward, where the annual dinner was waiting his return.

'Mrs. Anderson,' said the parson, as with a solemn dignity he raised the first cover, 'what is this? Half a Turkey! Is it possible that my prayer and sermon to-day have been less acceptable than formerly, that half the usual gift is retained? Explain it, Mrs. Anderson, if you can.'

'It is equally a mystery to me,' replied the disappointed and somewhat angry lady. 'Being quite busy, I deputed Laurens to receive the gifts and thank our friends. He went out immediately after sending me word that all had arrived: you may judge of my surprise to find every thing in halves.'

'Every thing!' echoed the divine, hastily rising from his seat and catching off the various covers and napkins.

A quiet and intelligent smile sat upon the features of the son, and when the disconcerted father had resumed his arm-chair at the foot of the table, Laurens slowly clasped his hands, slightly raised his handsome face, and with a subdued emphasis repeated the words of the morning prayer: 'Incline us to seek them in their own homes—to feed the hungry—to share equally with them the luxuries which this day affords.'

'I do not often pray as you understand it,' continued this reprobate son, 'but I sometimes assist in procuring answers to the prayers I hear. You, sir, believe in the prayer of the mouth—it may be in that of the heart—I believe only in that which is followed by immediate and corresponding action. You have prayed for the hungry—I have fed them.'

The parson felt the justice of the act, and smothering his vexation beneath a look of extreme gravity, replied, 'The poor minister is one to whom it is commanded to give.'

'But the servant of the Lord ceases to merit such gifts when his table is laden with silver and china,' pursued the incorrigible son, bestowing a deliberate glance upon the well-appointed dinner set. 'Say no more, I beseech you, sir; you will continue to pray, and, so often as lies within my power, your prayers shall be suitably answered. A slice of that turkey, sir, if you please; my walk has given me a sharp appetite.'

With a fierce scowl, the father seized the carving knife, while the scheming Mrs. Anderson bit her lips and bent her eyes upon her son with a look which plainly said, 'What was the use of giving away those nice things?'

But the domestic clouds at last disappeared beneath the cheering influences of a Thanksgiving dinner, and the conversation turned upon a select party, which they were to receive that evening, and which for the first time was permitted to displace the accustomed meeting for prayer and exhortation.

Shortly after dinner the rooms were properly lighted, the evening refreshments in order, fresh fuel heaped upon the glowing coals, and Mrs. Anderson's smiling face was every where visible, while the parson occupied his arm chair in stately dignity, secretly enjoying the scene far more than he considered proper to allow. Laurens had not been seen since his hasty departure from the dinner table, but his absence excited no surprise.

The scene was becoming brilliant. From respect to their minister, all boisterous mirth was restrained, but there was a refined and subdued gaiety among the elegant and wealthy parishioners, who alone composed the party, that rendered it sufficiently attractive to all.

'Where is your son?' inquired a lady of the Parson. 'I hope he will not deprive us of his society the whole evening.'

'I cannot answer for him, madam,' replied the spiritual guide; 'his waywardness will yet break my heart.'

At this moment the clergyman's daughter entered and whispered something in his ear which caused an angry flush to overspread his sharp, pale features, and without delay he hastened from the room.

Arriving at the kitchen, he was surprised and for a moment dismayed, to find that Laurens had returned with somewhat more than a dozen persons, who moving in the humbler and poorer walks of life, had been considered unworthy of invitations to the ministerial party.

'My friends, my dear friends, sir,' exclaimed the young man, without giving his father an opportunity of speaking; 'let me introduce them!' and quickly presenting each by name, they proved without exception to be members of that society which he was wont fondly to term his flock.

'I have been gathering the lambs, the long neglected lambs of your fold, sir,' continued the son, 'and I have brought them here, that for once they may feast upon the good things of this life and be merry.'

The Parson was desperate—the lady was beside herself; to admit these persons among their aristocratic guests was not to be thought of, and yet the character of a 'good shepherd' must be sustained.

'My son,' gravely commenced the father, drawing him one side, 'it will never do to introduce these people among our visitors—they would consider it a personal insult; still, as I recognize them as my hearers, I have no wish to treat them rudely. Give them a supper in the kitchen and dismiss them, I pray you—I command you,' he added, with a flashing eye, as he read the refusal on Laurens' ingenuous countenance.

'No entreaties, no commands will be of any avail to alter my plan,' replied the son, firmly. 'Come, my friends,' he added, suddenly and smilingly appearing among them, 'we will now enter the parlor; do not be disconcerted; depend upon me to make you friends.'

Presently, Laurens Anderson entered the brilliantly lighted rooms, with a blooming girl on each arm; one, the daughter of a washerwoman who officiated in the families of most of the persons present; the other, a young milliner's apprentice, delicate and beautiful as the silks and flowers which she daily wove into such exquisite forms. With elegant and easy condescension, Laurens presented his friends to his father's guests, and despite the freezing coldness; the distant and dignified bows; the smothered sneers; the half uttered ridicule; he continued to introduce his little party, and in half an hour they were merrily engaged in games which attracted the attention of all present.

Deeply mortified at so unwarrantable a proceeding, the Parson had seized an opportunity to withdraw to his study for a few moments, to gain that tranquility of mind which had twice that day been disturbed. Instantly taking advantage of his absence, Laurens gathered his friends into a back parlor, closed the folding doors, led his sister to the piano, and with a few who had consented to join them, were soon whirling the mazes of the merry dance.

Gradually the voices in the front parlor were more and more subdued, till silence 'reigned supreme'; little by little the folding doors unclosed with anxiously sympathizing faces peeping through the aperture; then suddenly they flew open, and in rushed a multitude to join the revellers, leaving those only who were prohibited from dancing by church membership.

'Ah, this is real enjoyment!' exclaimed Laurens, as after exhorting his sister to play with spirit, and without fear of consequences, he seized the hand of the milliner, and with her led off the dance.

The unwonted noise at last fell upon the ear of Parson Anderson, and completely overthrew all his late attempts at equanimity of spirit. Starting suddenly from his easy chair, he descended the stairs with a hasty and unministerial step, and passing unceremoniously the group of wonder struck spectators, presented his solemn phiz among the wild dancers. With an imperious gesture, he commanded his daughter to cease playing, and in an instant all stood silent and awe-struck before him. Laurens, the brave but unchristian Laurens, alone confronted the pious rage of the Parson.

'Only a little harmless sport, sir!' said he as carelessly as if no angry eye rested upon him, 'the Bible, you know, gives us time for dancing as well as praying; come, sir, be so good as to join us; it will cheer you. Go on, Mary; go on,' he added, with a meaning glance of his black eye, 'and if father chooses to join us, we will make room for him. I dare say he can find a partner among these elderly ladies; go on, Mary!'—and in the twinkling of an eye the Parsonage again shook beneath the tread of merry feet. Parson Anderson twice essayed to speak, but his voice was drowned in the wild bursts of merriment, and turning hopelessly away, he said in a melancholy tone of voice to those beside him, 'That boy will surely bring my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave!'

THE BREADSTUFFS—FOREIGN DEMAND.

Hunt's Merchant's Magazine for June, contains a valuable article on the cost of production and foreign demand for our breadstuffs. Great Britain, it seems, has long been an extensive importer of breadstuffs. Her average annual importation for the past seven years has exceeded twenty three millions of bushels of grain, or its equivalent in flour. But recent events have shown her inability to need vastly more grain than the average quantity of the past seven years. In 1846, she imported more than what is equivalent to forty one millions of bushels of grain; and in 1847, the quantity will doubtless be very much greater than during the previous year.

Now, the question is, from whence shall this immense quantity of grain be obtained? Hitherto the markets of Northern Europe have supplied a large part of the demand; and it has been supposed that the United States could not compete with the serf labor and pauper labor of Europe. But, all experience has shown that free labor is, in the long run, vastly cheaper than compulsory labor and those best acquainted with the cost of raising wheat in this country, aver that fifty cents a bushel will pay the farmer in Michigan, Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin, for raising wheat, and about fifty cents more will pay all the expenses of transportation to New York. This is not far from the average value of wheat at Danzig, the great grain market of Northern Europe. If, therefore, our facilities for shipping to Liverpool will counteract the advantages derived from the nearness of the Danzig and other European markets, which now averages about seven cents a bushel in their favor—it seems quite likely that we may compete with any country in supplying the grain market of Great Britain.

And, if this can be done, and if Great Britain should open her ports permanently for the introduction of foreign grain, the influence of this trade on our own country, as well as on England, cannot fail to be mighty indeed. Our farming, our mercantile and manufacturing interest will all feel the effects of this trade; and its moral influence will be mighty also. A war between England and the United States would not be a thing to be thought of, when one country was the producer and the other the consumer of the grain fields of the Great West.

TRICKS OF SPECULATORS.

This present extra high price of breadstuffs in the country is kept up by the mean tricks of the speculators. We will give you an instance. When the Cambria went to England a few weeks ago, letters were sent stating that there was a scarcity of breadstuffs here. Of course flour took a sudden and strong rise. Soon the Hibernia left and brings the news of a great rise in the flour market of England, and up goes the price of flour here, to correspond. How are the facts in the mean time? While the people of England are frightened by the false statements of these speculators, all the tremendous power of steam on railroads and water, as well as that of canal boats and other modes of conveyance, are not sufficient to bring our surplus to market. The warehouses are bursting, and the wharves groaning with loads of corn and flour. A writer in a Cleveland paper, at this very time, says that the grain warehouses of Cleveland, Ohio, are full to bursting, and the streets of this growing town, thronged with wheat teams from fifty miles around; and yet these honorable knaves are sending word across the Atlantic that grain is scarce here, in order to cause a rise there, and then make the rise of price there an excuse for raising it here. Thank God, there is enough on hand yet to sustain our population, and an abundant harvest at hand. There is another mean trick which these speculators often practice, such as the following: Just before the corn or wheat harvest, when they wish to push off their old stock at an advanced price, you will see in some of the commercial reports distressing accounts of the rust, and the weevil, and the hessian fly at the far west, by which the crops are nearly all cut off. This operates well for them until the truth comes out.

The trade in breadstuffs should be conducted in a fair and honorable way, and every one is willing that good profit should be made by dealers; but when advantage is taken of the wants of the community, and by meanness and trickery, the poor find it very difficult to be fed, what is it but speculating in the very lives of mankind?—Maine Farmer.

ANATOMY, PATHOLOGY, &c.

It is a long time, Nimrod, since we have proposed questions for you to answer. Suppose you get round on the other side of the imposing stone, and let us see how near you come to knowing as much as the doctors.

Yes, sir—here I am.

Q. How does man differ from the brute creation?

A. He stands upright but doesn't act so. He walks on two legs contrary to the Bible, where it says, upon thy belly shalt thou go all the days of thy life, and the seed of the woman shall catch thee by the heel.

Q. What is the office of the brain?

A. To grind over old ideas and pass them off for new.

Q. What is the spinal marrow?

A. Goose grease extracted from bat linings, leather aprons, and various other vegetables.

Q. What is hydrosodotherapy?

A. That is what they call the water cure; putting a drunken man under a pump-nose, or drowning one's self for love. It is sometimes practised upon dirty-faced children, but in a different manner.

Q. What is the homoeopathic system?

A. Letting the patient look at a box of pills, or making him walk past an apothecary's shop twice a day.

Q. Where is situated the carotid artery?

A. It commences both sides of the neck at the shirt collar, passes up under the hat brim to the top of the head, then down the insensate canal and terminates in both boots.

Q. What is a panacea?

A. A universal medicine; by many thought to be brandy and water.

Q. How long ought a person to remain in a warm bath?

A. Till he finds his toe-nails floating on the surface of the water.

The examination is closed.

TOO LATE.

Some men are always too late, and, therefore, accomplish, through life, nothing worth naming. If they promise to meet you at such an hour, they are never present till thirty minutes after. No matter how important the business is, either to yourself or to him, he is just as tardy. If he takes a passage in the steamboat he arrives just as the boat has left the wharf, and the cars have started a few moments before he arrives. His dinner has been waiting for him so long that the cook is out of patience, and half the time is obliged to set the table again. This course the character we have described always pursues. He is never in season, at church, at a place of business, at his meals, or in his bed. Persons of such habits we cannot but despise. Much rather would we have a man too early to see us, and always ready, even if he should carry out his principle to the extent of the good de able to ask if the proof of his last work was corrected—all corrected? Yes, all. Then I shall have a complete edition in glory.—J. N. Maju.

LATER FROM EUROPE. The Steamship Cambria arrived in Boston on Thursday morning last, in less than thirteen days from Liverpool.

The news changes the face of things entirely in Europe.

The money market is easier, breadstuffs have fallen, and the state of trade is more satisfactory.

Death still continues its ravages in Ireland—in the south more especially. In some of the principal towns of the north of England, typhus fever rages with increased virulence. In Liverpool, Leeds, and other places, several of the Catholic clergy have fallen victims to their ministerial duties—caught the fever and died.

Daniel O'Connell, the Apostle of Liberty, as he is called, is no more. He died at Genoa on the 15th of May, at the advanced age of seventy two years.

Rev. Dr. Chalmers of Scotland, died very suddenly.

Prince Jerome Bonaparte, nephew of Napoleon, lately died at Florence, from a disease of the spine.

The harvest prospects throughout Ireland are most promising; but it is stated that the fatal blight in the present potato crop has again made its appearance, and more than a month earlier than its ravages commenced last year.

The emigration from Germany to the United States continues on a truly gigantic scale. It will this year far exceed that of any previous year.

MASONIC FESTIVAL. The anniversary of the nativity of St. John the Baptist, will be observed by the Morning Star Lodge, of Worcester, on the 24th inst. Address by Rev. Benjamin Hinton of Canton. The Grand Lodge of this State will be in attendance. Several Masonic branches from other parts of the State, in full regalia, have signified their intention to be present. The Boston Encampment of Knight Templars will perform the escort duty.

SOUTH SHORE RAILROAD. The meeting of the stockholders of this corporation was held at Weymouth on the 9th inst., for the choice of directors. The following persons were chosen for the present year:—Caleb Stetson, Boston; Alfred C. Hersey, do.; William Humphrey, do.; Hon. George Tyler Bigelow, do.; James C. Donne, Cohasset; Elliot L. White, Braintree; John W. Loud, Weymouth. The board proceeded to the choice of a President, when Caleb Stetson was chosen, and Gilman Davis of Boston, elected Treasurer.

The corporation are now in a condition to proceed efficiently in the work of construction—having the whole amount of capital nearly subscribed. The work, it is understood, will be put under contract as soon as proper surveys and specifications can be prepared.

MASSACHUSETTS REGIMENT. The volunteers from this State, engaged in the Mexican war, have had orders to march to Monterey, to join the troops under Maj. Gen. Taylor, who intends to take San Luis Potosi.

Lt. Col. Wright, has been elected Colonel of the regiment, vice Col. Caleb Cushing promoted to the office of Brigadier General; Major Abbott, Lieut. Colonel, and Captain Webster, Major.

ANTI-SLAVERY MEETING. The annual meeting of the Old Colony Anti Slavery Society will be held in the Christian Baptist Meeting-house, at old Plymouth, on SATURDAY and SUNDAY, July 3d and 4th, 1847, commencing at nine o'clock in the forenoon, and continuing through each day and evening.

The ladies of Plymouth propose holding a Fair on the occasion, the proceeds of which will be devoted to the anti-slavery cause.

EMBEZZLING. Hon. Barker Burnell, late cashier of the Manufacturers and Mechanics Bank of Nantucket has been on trial for embezzling the funds of that institution. The jury, after being out all night, came in with a verdict of not guilty. The prisoner was then recommitted to jail to answer to the seven other indictments pending against him. The Court reduced his bonds from twenty five to ten thousand dollars, which has been procured, and his liberation consequently effected.

THE SHOWER. During the shower last Thursday afternoon, the residence of widow Charlotte Brackett in this town, (formerly the house of Mr. James Edwards), was slightly damaged by lightning, the electric fluid first striking the chimney, passing down the rafters of the roof, escaping in front through the frame work of the door and in rear through a window casement. Several persons were in the house, none of whom were injured, and the damage to the residence was not of much amount.

DISGRACEFUL OUTRAGE. The dwelling-house of Den. Moses Grant, in Boston, was assailed last Saturday night, by a gang of cowardly ruffians. Four bottles, filled with coal tar—a material which is connected with the manufacture of combustible gas—were thrown simultaneously against the four large front windows of the house. Three of the bottles broke the windows and went into the rooms, where they were broken and their contents scattered in every direction, thereby much defacing the furniture in the rooms.

MEXICO. There does not appear to be much news from Mexico. The principal part of the American army, under Maj. Gen. Scott, was at Puebla, seventy six miles from the city of Mexico; it was thought they would continue their march upon the Capitol without waiting for the large reinforcements which are almost daily arriving.

It is rumored that Santa Anna had resigned the Presidency; again, that he had been superseded; again that he had been pelted with stones and was unpopular.

Another account represents that the Mexicans have a very large army to dispute the march of Maj. Gen. Scott to the Capitol, and also a large force in the City.

Probably, another serious battle will be fought before the American army can enter the Mexican City.

Maj. Gen. Taylor will soon proceed with his forces to San Luis Du Potosi, and afterwards if found expedient to join Maj. Gen. Scott.

Champooing and Hair-Cutting.

WILLIAM E. AMBUSH, WOULD respectfully inform the Ladies and Gentlemen of Quincy, that he has constantly on hand a new and unequalled

CHAMPOOING MIXTURE, far superior to the far famed Eagle Hyperion, which when scientifically applied, renders the Hair soft and pliable and imparts to it a peculiar gloss, a flexibility which cannot be obtained from any other combination.

He would also recommend the application of his superior Hair Mixture to those afflicted with cutaneous diseases, to which may be attributed the loss of hair, especially by the young. It is a stimulant to and nourishes the growth of the hair; quickly restores the scalp to a healthy condition, which must be accomplished before the hair will make its appearance. It is the great desideratum of the age.

Ladies wishing this application will be waited upon at their residences by W. E. Ambush, by leaving orders at his Emporium, Southern Building, Quincy.

POETRY.

For the Quincy Patriot.

LINES ON THE DEATH OF MY NIECE.

I little thought, when last we met,
That death so soon would come,
And thou in his arms away,
Down to the silent tomb.

I saw it not upon thy brow,
Nor in thy pleasant eye,
Nor in thy joyous, mirthful laugh,
That thou so soon would die.

The glow of health upon thy cheek,
Foretold a longer stay,
Alas! the conquering angel came,
And bore thee away.

I do not like to think that death,
So cruel and unkind,
Should snatch a lovely friend away
And leave a brilliant mind.

But this it is and thus 'twill be,
While he hath power to reign;
He plucks the fairest flowers that bloom,
Unmindful of our pain.

But we do hope to meet again
In yon bright realms above,
Free from all earthly care and pain
And bask in smiles of love.

LINES WRITTEN FOR A SISTER'S ALBUM.

Sister! when the shades of evening,
Gather o'er the peaceful sky;
And the twinkling stars of heaven,
Take their stations noiselessly;

When the day is disappearing,
With its proud and noisy train;
And the moon her crest uprearing,
Sheds her silver light again;

When my labors all are over,
And my spirit wanders free;
Then around my home I hover,
And my heart communes with thee.

Sister! let not earthly pleasure,
Bind thee to this narrow sphere;
Lest thou lose the proffered treasure,
Gained by doing well while here.

Life is but a fleeting vapor;
Soon we must be called away;
Ever burning is life's taper;
Ever onward is our way.

Life is like a troubled ocean,
Where dark clouds rise o'er our way;
And through this bewildering roving,
Sorrow dims our brightest day.

But there is a cloudless Heaven,
For above the clouds' low flight;
And when death shall cut our life-string,
We may soar to blissful light.

Sailing on life's troubled ocean,
Let bright hope thy path illumine;
Then, though storms of sorrow gather,
We may safely arrive at home.

TAKE BACK THY VOWS.

Take back thy vows,—they're false as thou art fair,
And unstead as thy varying mind,—
Nor longer shall this bosom share
In bliss that leaves a sting behind.

Take back thy vows,—I would not longer hold
The gift you gave when fortune smiled,
If, soon as adverse winds blow cold,
You slight the heart your lips beguiled.

Take back thy vows,—for like the poisoned dart,
Shot from the quiver of some hidden foe,
Their venom'd shaft hath pierced the heart,
That oft hath wept at their woe.

Take back thy vows,—nor let one thought remain
Of all those tender joys that now are o'er,
Which like the dazling sunbeams come,
To cheer my path awhile—then set to rise no more.

WHO OWES THE PRINTER.

I do suppose
All knowledge flows
Right from the printing press;
So oft I go,
In these rare clothes,
And settle up—I guess.

ANECDOTES.

A young Miss was greeted at the door with the query, "have you any cold victuals?" from a little urchin. "Oh, no," she replied, "no, they are all hot." "Then, please Miss," returned the little varlet, "I will wait till they are cold!"

A lady who was a strict observer of etiquette, being unable to go to church one Sunday, sent her card.

A boy in Jamaica was driving a mule; the animal suddenly stopped and turned his arched neck upon the boy, as if in defiance and contempt. "Won't go, will you? feel grand, do you? I guess you forget your father was a jackass."

The Marquis enquired of his young wife, "What is the reason you can't enjoy my company at home, instead of running abroad; ought we not to be one person?" "Oh! yes," replied the lively brunette, "we certainly are—and I hate solitude!"

"Mister, you are green!" "Prove it," said mister. "The scripture says 'flesh is as grass,' and grass is green; ergo, you are green." Give that man a leather medal, Timothy!

"Madam," said a doctor to an old maid, "you stand in need of the son and air; till you have them you can never get well." "La, doctor, I have no objection against having a son and heir, but I must get a husband first."

NOTABILITIES OF NEW YORK.

The best life of the Commercial Metropolis permeates daily through the narrow streets that lead past our office; standing cornerwise upon Nassau and Ann streets, we can see from our office window great men marching past in Indian file, and sometimes in couples, who, if they were suddenly to drop upon some remote town in the interior, would set all the inhabitants in an uproar. Here are centred in a very small compass, the offices whence the thoughts and fancies of the national mind are scattered over the earth; and here may be seen the Notabilities of New York and the nation, passing and repassing, in their quiet and easy slipshod manner, apparently unconscious of being somebody. It is a fine thing to be well spoken of by the world, but we think that praise must be very wearisome to honest men, who know how little they deserve it. But we are not going to moralize on fame. Turning our dusty Venetian window blind, that we may peep down upon the undisputed crowd of notabilities who shuffle past our corner, what a wonderful sameness is presented by the black cylinders which they wear on their heads! It must have been in the days of red breeches when man was likened to that vegetable phenomenon, a forked radish. Nothing can look less like a radish than a gentleman dressed in black trousers. It is the hour for opening the courts, and nine men out of a dozen, who hurry along with their faces towards the City Hall, are lawyers. It is marvellous to look at them, bowing, chatting and smiling; and yet living out of the wretchedness of the most wretched part of the community! There are Judges, Barristers and Authors among them, world-renowned, but we will let them pass, now; presently, Doctors of Divinity, Scholars, Editors, and Authors will be marching along, little dreaming that somebody is peering down upon them, watching for a suitable subject to impale upon his steel pen. By the brazen trumpet of Fame, but there is a temptation! A famous editor and reformer [Horace Greeley] is rushing down Ann street, at a fearful speed, with the skirts of his drab coat flapping in the wind, and his trousers about his heels. He is sucking an orange. Now if we had a turn for humorous writing, or for satire, or for sarcasm, which, thank Heaven! we have not, what a subject for an article would this be! But, as our vein of writing is serious, we let it go, with some such feelings as the cock rejected a pearl when he was in search of a pea. We require something serious, sedate and matter-of-fact. And here he comes, a fresh looking gentleman, with an English complexion and a Yankee eye; he, too, is enjoying himself, but not with an orange; he is indulging in a thoughtful pinch of snuff. There is a quiet, complacent air about him, mingled with a look of energy that arrests the attention of the passengers, who turn to look at him when they have rubbed past him. A man who can command such a mark of notableness as that, in Nassau street, must be a man of mark. The denizens of crowded streets never throw away their remarks upon commonplace objects. If you would know whether your air be distingue or not, take a noon-tide walk through Nassau street. If the people do not turn their heads when you pass them, you may give up the pursuit of notoriety, and reconcile yourself to the comfortable assurance that you are nobody. Our grave subject is a cross between an author and a merchant; he has not the carelessness of one nor the primness of the other, but a mixture of the two. He is the projector, proprietor and editor of that unique periodical, the MERCHANTS' MAGAZINE, a work that could be made up only by one who united in himself the qualities of a merchant and an author—a union that is very rare.

There have been authors engaged in trade, and there have been merchants engaged in authorship; but few men have united the essential qualities of the two. The subject before us might have been either, but happily for himself he is neither merchant nor author, but something between the two, the editor of a merchants' library. Freeman Hunt, they say, is about forty three years of age; he was born in the old town of Quincy, in Massachusetts, and lost his father, who was a ship master, in his childhood. Like Yankee boys in general, he picked up the rudiments of an English education at a country school, and apprenticed to a Boston printer at the age of fourteen. A printer's trade, a common education, and a brave heart, have formed the sole capital of many a great man in the Republic. Freeman Hunt, like Benjamin Franklin, and many a true man besides, through these simple elements has achieved a position in the world, and kept his honor untarnished. No sooner was he out of his time, than he thought it was time for him to begin to establish himself in the world, and instead of squatting upon the soil which another man had cleared, with the true energy of a Yankee he looked about him for a spot which nobody had yet improved—a woman's land that he could claim for his own by right of prior discovery. At that time there was not one of those now numerous publications called Ladies Magazines, and with a true insight into the wants of the reading public, he projected a periodical similar to the Lady's Book, which, we believe, he called the Lady's Magazine. Mrs. Sarah J. Hale was just attracting notice by her first novel, and Mr. Hunt purchased the use of her name as editrice. The Magazine succeeded, but did not satisfy the ambition of the proprietor. He sold out, and began the republication of the Penny Magazine, which reached a sale of five thousand numbers; this work he soon abandoned, and got up the Bewick Company, an association of authors, artists, printers, and bookbinders, whose object was the publication of their own works. Mr. Hunt was the managing director, and displayed wonderful talents at financing, for as the association had nothing but talents and genius, it required no ordinary degree of financial skill to exchange their products for grosser materials, without which they could do nothing. The Bewick Company was abandoned after a while and he then got up two volumes of American Anecdotes, which were highly successful, and have formed a magazine of wealth for succeeding book-makers;—then, the "American Pulpit," an Episcopal periodical. In 1831, he returned to New York, and established a weekly newspaper called "The Traveller"; in 1834, he published a Comprehensive Atlas, which was very successful, and reached a third edition. Afterwards he wrote letters to some of the Boston papers, and published a popular work called Letters about the Hudson River. His next enterprise was the Merchants' Magazine, a work entirely original in its plan, and which was successful from the start. By his singular tact, good management and industry, he has built up a work on a plan, which is so obviously right, now that it has become un fait accompli, that people wonder it was never done before. The success of Mr. Hunt is a remarkable instance of what may be accomplished by patient perseverance and honorable conduct; and his example should serve to stimulate the exertions of the thousands of young men who are daily launched upon the world to seek their fortunes, with no other capital than their strong arms and honest hearts.

We believe that Mr. Hunt has never taken an active part in partizan politics; he has, however, been a firm and consistent advocate of free trade since the commencement of his magazine, and is one of the very few sound writers on political economy which this country has produced.

PUNCH DRINKING—ITS EFFECTS. One particular dark, damp, drizzly, and disagreeable day, in the latter part of November, A. D. 1842, a tall, gaunt, queerlooking customer, dressed in a blue coat, with metal buttons, a brimstone colored vest and plaid pantaloons, with calkskin terminations, sat "solitary and alone" in a little room situated in a certain little tavern in — street, city of Philadelphia. Before him was a little round table, on whose marble top was not a little pitcher of smoking punch, "screechin hot"; and a wine glass.

The solitary individual was York, nothing else dear child, and that was his second pitcher, nigh his second pitcher empty. One minute after, and you couldn't have squeezed a drop out of either glass or pitcher, by a forty two pound hydraulic press. York rang the bell. The waiter popped his head in at the door.

"Ring, sa?" "Of course I did. Is't clearing off?" "No, sa—damp—sa—fog so thick, sa, you could ladle a 'bout 'ith a spoon, sa."

"Have any thing, sa?" "More punch, and strong!" "Yes, sa—immediately, sa!" The waiter withdrew, and in a few seconds the third pitcher of punch stood before our hero, who attacked it zealously. York had just drained the last glass full from the pitcher, and was beginning to feel glorious, when on raising his eyes he saw his own figure in a large pier glass directly opposite.

He rubbed his eyes, winked, coughed, started, winked and rubbed his eyes again. "By —!" said he, "there's some fellow sittin' rite before me. This is a private room sir, for my sole accommodation."

He waited a moment, expecting an answer but the reflection merely stared at him, and held its peace. "I was saying, sir, this was my private room—mine, sir," cried York, fetching his voice an octave higher than before. No answer was made; and he rang the bell furiously. The waiter made his appearance again.

"King, sa?" "Yes I did ring. Didn't I ask for a private room?"

"I sa—this is a private room, sa."

"It is! why there is a fellow sittin' right before me now, on the other side of the table—rot his impudence!"

"Table, sa—fellow—sa?" "Yes, there is—well—never mind."

"Bring me some more punch and two glasses."

"Yes, sa—immediately, sa."

In a very short time the fourth pitcher, with the two glasses, made its appearance.

York filled one of the glasses, and shoved it over the table. "Will you drink sir?" said he, addressing the figure in the glass. "Oh, you wont, eh—well, I will." And so he did. "Better drink, old fellow" continued he. "Your liquor's getting cold, and you look as if you were fond of the thing."

No answer being returned, York finished the pitcher, and rang the bell again. In popped the waiter.

"Ring, sa?" "To be sure I rang. Didn't you hear the b-b-bell? I did. Didn't I order a private room?"

"Yes, sa—this is a private room, sa."

"A pretty private room this is—with a fellow sittin' opposite, that wont take a glass of punch when it is offered him—and a r-red nosed man at that? Oh! well never mind."

"Bring me more punch, and t-t-tumblers. I'll t-try him again!"

Presently the pitcher No. V, with glasses to match, was borne in with due state.

"Better t-try some old boy," said York coaxingly to his double. The reflex merely looked good natured, but said nothing.

"Well," continued York, with a sigh, "if this isn't the m-m-most infamous—well—never mind—I'll drink the punch,—and so he did, every bit of it. About five minutes sufficed to end the pitcher. York rang the bell, superfluously. The waiter came again.

"King, sa?" "Why, certain! Why, sh-sh-ouldn't I?"

"Where's the—man—who keeps this p-p-place?"

"Boss, sa? I'll sen' 'im, sa."

Shortly after, mine host, a quiet looking little man, with a noddled, calico-patterned face, and a shining bald head, made his appearance.

"Wh-wha-t's to pay?" demanded York rising and assuming an air of dignity.

"Five punches—five levies, sir."

"There's the money, sir," said York, forking out the coin. "And now I want to know why—when I call for a private room, you should put me here—with somebody else?"

"There is nobody here but you and I!"

"Nobody? Do you s-s-s-pose I can't see? Do you th-think I am drunk? There—look there. Two of 'em by jingo?"

"Well sir, I must confess I can't see any but us two."

"You can't eh? And York dragged the landlord to the glass. Look there, continued he, pointing to the glass. "There's the rascals, now. One of 'em's enough like you to be your brother, and the other the d—dest silliest, meanest looking white man, I ever saw."

gal, is honorable. The law says I don't owe you a cent."

"Honor says you do; and of the two, honor generally tells more truths than law," says the mendicant, evidently displeased.

"You are getting wearisome. Will you be kind enough to step out of the way?"

"You call yourself a Christian."

"I am a Christian, I flatter myself—a deacon."

"You are esteemed a pious, honest, trustworthy Christian."

"I am as good a one as can be found in the religious community."

"Then the dominion of the evil one can boast of purity when compared with such communities, and the society of thieves is cemented by more real honor. Your respectability, honor, piety, and justice, are composed of broadcloths and fine words, and go no farther. Keep your money. I'd starve before I'd touch a copper of it."

Some years ago, the above conversation actually took place in the city of New York.

A short time ago, the mendicant—now a stove dealer in business—employed his oppressor, reduced to want, as a porter, and after deducting the amount of the dishonorable bill, generously presented the bill to the fallen Pharisee. This is an absolute fact. Every day life teems with such remarkable transactions, and singular reverses. Retributive justice, sooner or later, overtakes the evil-doer, and the ingenuity of man knows not how to avert the merited and never-failing punishment.—New York Sun.

LOAFERS. One fine morning, while Benjamin Franklin was busy preparing his newspaper for the press, a lounge stepped into the store, and spent an hour or more in looking over the books, etc. and finally taking one in hand, asked the shop boy the price.

"One dollar," was the answer.

"One dollar," said the lounge, "can't you take less than that?"

"No, indeed,—one dollar is the price."

Another hour had nearly passed, when the lounge asked—

"Is Mr. Franklin at home?"

"Yes, he is in the printing office."

"I want to see him," said the lounge.

The shop boy immediately informed Mr. Franklin that a gentleman was in the store waiting to see him. Franklin was soon behind the counter, when the lounge, with book in hand, addressed him thus:

"Mr. Franklin what is the lowest you can take for this book?"

"One dollar and a quarter," was the ready answer.

"One dollar and a quarter! Why, your young man asked only a dollar!"

"True," said Franklin—"and I could have better afforded to take a dollar than, than to have been taken out of the office."

The lounge seemed surprised and wishing to end the parley of his own making, said,

"Come, Mr. Franklin, tell me what is the lowest you can take for it?"

"One dollar and a half."

"A dollar and a half!—why you offered it yourself for a dollar and a quarter!"

"Yes," said Franklin,—and I had better have taken that price then, than a dollar and a half now."

The lounge paid down the price and went about his business—if he had any—and Franklin returned into the printing office.

CHEAP CARPETING. In these days when our fashionable ladies give up darning stockings and patching sheets in favor of making dainty patch work to cover chairs and lounges, it may be well to mention a novelty in the way of fancy housewifery which may possibly captivate the imitative propensity of some of our fair readers. The Portsmouth Journal mentions a way of making carpeting at ninepence per yard, which runs as follows: Sew together strips of the cheapest cotton cloth, of the size of the room, and tack the edges at the floor. Then paper the cloth as you would the sides of a room, with any sort of room paper. After being well dried, give it two coats of varnish, and your carpet is finished. It can be washed like canvas carpets, without injury, retains its gloss, and, on chambers or keeping rooms where it will not meet rough usage will last for two years as good as new.—Boston Transcript.

THE WIFE'S COMMANDMENTS. 1. Thou shalt have no other wife but me.

2. Thou shalt not take into thy house any beautiful brazen image of a servant girl, to bow down to her and serve her; for I am a jealous wife, visiting, etc.

3. Thou shalt not take the name of thy wife in vain.

4. Remember thy wife to keep her respectably.

5. Honor thy wife's father and mother.

6. Thou shalt not fret.

7. Thou shalt not find fault with thy dinner.

8. Thou shalt not chew tobacco.

9. Thou shalt not be behind thy neighbor.

10. Thou shalt not visit the rum tavern; thou shalt not covet the tavern-keeper's rum, nor his brandy, nor his gin, nor his whiskey, nor wine, nor his beer, nor anything that is behind the bar of the rumrunner.

11. Thou shalt not visit the Billiard Hall, neither for worshipping in the dance, nor the heaps of money that lie on the table.

And the twelfth Commandment is, thou shalt not stay out later than nine o'clock at night.

WHAT WILL BECOME OF THE WORLD? A writer states that the population of the United States has doubled in twenty four years; the British Islands, in forty nine and a half years; France, besides its loss of two millions by wars, in thirty five years; the German States, in fifty years; and Russia in about thirty five years—average, less than forty years. It is estimated that there are at this time one thousand millions of people on the globe; which, if doubled only five times in two hundred years, will make the number thirty two thousand millions. So if the whole surface of the earth, including rivers, lakes, swamps and deserts, contains but fifty millions of square miles, or thirty two thousand millions of acres, there will then be less than one acre of land for each individual.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTE. James Smithson was a native of London. He was a man of quiet, unobtrusive habits and benevolent feelings. His life was spent in intellectual pursuits; being principally devoted to researches in physical and experimental science. By perseverance and rigid economy he amassed considerable wealth—more happy to tread the simple and self-denying path of the scholar and philosopher than become the votary of that idle round of sensual pleasure and gorgeous display, to which wealth and leisure are so frequently devoted. In this lofty preference for superior objects of thoughts and taste, shone out the man whose memory is now to be cherished in the undecaying gratitude of a great people. He died at Genoa in Italy in 1829; and bequeathed the whole of his accumulated wealth to the United States. "to found an Institution at Washington for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men." The legacy amounted to upwards of five hundred thousand dollars, and was finally secured to our government in 1838. The interest accruing since that time, on the original bequest, has become sufficient to erect a magnificent temple at Washington which is hereafter to be known as the "Smithsonian Institute."

SECRET OF PILL MAKING. All the "unquelled," "surprising," "astounding" and "miraculous" vegetable pills which are sold at from twenty five to fifty cents per box, are composed chiefly of aloes, gamboge and soap, and any apothecary can make up as good a box of pills as the best patent article of the kind for twelve and a half cents, and realize fifty per cent. by the job. Aloes is the principal ingredient; it is a good purgative medicine in some cases, but the use of it sometimes is attended with great inconvenience and danger. No conscientious man can recommend aloetic pills as a universal medicine. To know to what extent the manufacture of pills is carried on, it is stated that a short distance from the city of New York, there is a manufactory of pills at which it is not uncommon to see sloops filled up with the article, regularly done up in casks.

SHOOTING BIRDS. The following is the law of this Commonwealth, in relation to the destruction of birds at certain seasons of the year—a law which should be strictly enforced:—"If any person shall, between the first day of March and the first day of September, kill or destroy any of the birds called Partridges, or Quails; or shall, between the first day of March and the fourth day of July, kill or destroy any of the birds called Woodcocks, Snipes, Larks or Robins; or shall, between the first day of January and the first day of November, take, kill, or destroy any of the birds called Grouse or Heath Hens; or shall, within the respective times aforesaid, sell, or buy, or have in his possession any of the said birds, killed, or taken as aforesaid, he shall forfeit for every such Partridge, Quail or Woodcock, the sum of two dollars, and for every Grouse, or Heath Hen, the sum of ten dollars, to be recovered by complaint before any justice of the peace."

SINGULAR STREAMS. In Franklin county, northern New York, is a brook formed from two streams, which are intermittent; they are very singular in their character, sometimes being perfectly dry for twenty four hours together, and then again flowing freely. It is supposed that they are fed by some underground syphon, for it is noted that they are never dry in the hot summer weather, when other streams generally fail, and never cease to flow for more than a day at a time. They stop flowing very suddenly, and when at the highest have been known to stop running and dry up at once.

BUTTONWOOD TREES. These trees in the vicinity of New York, are in full foliage, exempt from the disease which has afflicted them for several years. This is not the case about Boston, where the melancholy sycamores look as though they had been using some popular hair restorative.

VISIT OF THE PRESIDENT. The President of the United States is now on a journey, and is expected to reach Boston on Tuesday next, the city government of which has chosen a committee to make proper arrangements for his reception.

The Governor of this Commonwealth, as is usual on such occasions, has ordered the First Regiment of Light Infantry in Boston, with the Rifle corps and Lancers annexed, to hold themselves in readiness to perform escort duty on his arrival.

Charlestown and Roxbury have extended an invitation to the President to visit those cities.

The city government of Lowell have appropriated five hundred dollars for a suitable reception.

NEW SUPERINTENDENT. The Fall River Railroad Company have secured the services of George Haven of Framingham, as Superintendent of their road. He has been a conductor on the Worcester Railroad for several years. His attention then to business and universal courteousness rendered him exceedingly popular with the travelling community. This change was greatly needed. Are not the conductors rather in a hurry at way stations to 'go ahead?' Do aged persons have time to get out of the cars? We think not.

Snow. The Wilmington (Del.) Journal states that a severe snow storm visited the farmers near and above the Pennsylvania boundary the first part of the present month. The storm lasted in some places for an hour, and must have injured the crops.

MEXICO. There is no news of particular interest from Mexico since last week. The American army will not march upon the City of Mexico until reinforced. Gen. Santa Anna has resigned the office of President. The accounts are contradictory relative to fortifying the Capitol. The guerrillas commit some murderous depredations. Mexico begins to realize the strength of the United States.

ALARM. Last evening, a campane lamp in the shoe store of Capt. Samuel White of this town, which was suspended from the ceiling, accidentally fell to the floor, broke, and the fluid took fire, by which the interior of the store was somewhat injured and an alarm of fire raised.

VISIT. A military company from Boston, accompanied by a band of music, contemplate visiting this town next Tuesday, and dine at the Hancock House.

STORE ENTERED. The store of Mr. Elisha Packard of this town, was entered on Thursday night last, and between eight hundred and a thousand dollars worth of goods taken. The rogues entered through a back window by cutting a hole through the shutter and unfastening the same. The goods taken were all of the best quality, these wholesale thieves being very choice in their selections. Mr. Packard is a very worthy and enterprising young man, and this loss falls heavily on him. We hope the sympathy of the people of this place will be excited in his behalf. A reward of one hundred dollars has been offered for the recovery of the property.

FIRE CRACKERS. Whereas at the present season, many persons are in the habit of firing crackers, thereby endangering the lives and limbs of persons with horses, and endangering buildings by fire, we have been requested to publish the following sections from the Revised Statutes, that persons may know the penalties to which they lay themselves liable:

SEC. 5. If any person shall have in his possession, with intent to sell, or shall offer for sale, or shall sell, or give away, any of the fireworks called rockets, crackers, squibs or serpents, without first having obtained the license of the Selectmen of the town, he shall, for every such offence, forfeit a sum not exceeding ten dollars, to the use of the town in which the offence shall have been committed.

SEC. 6. If any person shall have in his possession, with intent to set fire to, or shall set fire to, any rocket, cracker, squib or serpent, or shall throw any lighted rocket, cracker, squib or serpent, within any town, without the license of the selectmen, he shall, for every offence, forfeit a sum not exceeding ten dollars, to the use of the town in which the offence shall have been committed.

A great mind retracts an error as soon as it is discovered. To persist in wrong is absolute folly. Can it be degrading to acknowledge that we have discovered the truth?

MANHOOD.

CAUSES of its Premature Decline, with directions for its Perfect Restoration. Addressed to those suffering from the destructive effects of Excessive Indulgence, Solitary Habits, etc., etc. By L. Deslandes, M. D. Translated from the French, with many additions; By an American Physician. Twenty-seventh edition. 252 pp. 12 mo.

RECOMMENDATIONS. "Physicians of extensive observations, and superintendents of establishments for the moral management of Lunatics, concur in assuring us that the cancer-worm of death is gnawing at the vitals of many youths of all ages, in all countries too, as portrayed by the author. If it were once freely circulated, the tendency would be beneficial, because like an alarm gun, it would give warning in season to avert threatened danger. It might thus drive away a fiend that would ruin soul and body at the same time and blight the dawn of life before the individual is conscious of his duty to himself, to society, or to his Maker.—Boston Medical and Surgical Journal.

"I consider Deslandes' book, as decidedly the best treatise extant in the French or English Language. The subject is extremely important, and one too much overlooked by our profession generally, and the evils of the vice, on which your publication treats are not appreciated by the community, although the cases presented in your book are frightful. Yet judging from many patients who have been under treatment they have not been overdrawn.—A. Sidney Doane, M. D. New York.

"The work of Deslandes, by pointing out the diseases resulting from excesses, the evils of which are manifest in every insane asylum, no less than in the shattered constitution of those indulging, will do much to prevent the vice, which by its prevalence among the young has so much influence on the present as on the future well being of the many.—Winslow Lewis, Jr., M. D., Boston.

"The vice is doubtless very much more common in this country than is generally supposed, or than most medical men are ready to believe; and it is a trifling source of ill health and fatal disease with the young. I have no doubt; I hope therefore it will go into extensive circulation. The views of the writer are excellent on this subject.—Dr. S. B. Woodward, Superintendent of the Insane Hospital at Worcester.

"The present work abounds in well authenticated cases going fully to substantiate the position taken by the author, and cannot be read without producing a deep conviction that something ought to be done to check this deplorable evil.—Zion's Herald.

"The volume as now published will prove eminently useful, and deserving the consideration of all to whom is committed the responsible trust of moral and physical education.—John W. Francis, M. D., New York.

"We recommend the work, entitled 'Manhood, etc., to the careful perusal of persons of all classes. The moral as well as the physical advantages sure to result from such perusal will be most readily recognized and felt by those who stand most in need of them.—Phoenix Journal.

"We do not think we go too far in saying that society is deeply indebted to the author for producing so useful, so much wanted, so valuable, and so truly moral a book.—Conservative Journal.

"The work entitled 'Manhood, is one of the few books now coming before the public on such a subject which can lay claim to the character of being strictly professional, at the same time that it is fully intelligible to all who read it. The moral and medical precepts given in it render it invaluable.—Magnet.

POETRY.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

There was an hour when Freedom wept,
As o'er Columbia's hills she heard
The clanking of an iron step,
The ban of Slavery's tyrant word—
There was one master-man that then
Knew not the fears of common men.

There was a tide that swept along
Our flowery vales and pine-clad hills,
A deep and cursed tide of wrong,
Tainting our very rocks and rills—
There was one barrier 'fore it thrown,
That pressed it back almost alone.

There was a time when Slavery reigned
Within our country's hallowed hall,
When e'en the thoughts of men were claimed,
And freemen worshipped at his call—
There was one meteor braved the curse,
And dared the fiend to do his worst.

Alone he dared that curse defy,
How coward hearts before him bowed,
How Slavery sought to 'scape his eye,
And how his minions' neath him cowed;
And while of wrongs and tears he told
Fair Freedom bade her man be bold.

And bold he was! for all the might
Of countless facts and conquering thought,
Sarcastic wit (wild Error's blight),
His genius to this battle brought;
And age, that hallowed down the whole—
O, how majestic seemed his soul!

Petition, Freedom's fettered child?
He's raised thy faltering state,
And Slavery mourns his weakened cause,
That late, so Cæsar-like, seemed great—
For Adams did a Brutus' part,
And stabbed the tyrant to the heart.

"He is a man," the Roman cried,
"The noblest title I can bring."
They told yet more of aged Lear,
"He's wise," and "every inch a king!"—
But higher names are due this man,
He's every inch a republican.

Great Adams, ye have won a name
That future ages yet shall bless:
A bold cause begets a fame
That faithless time can ne'er make less.
History shall ask, when thou art gone,
Thy name to league with Washington.

THE PIRATE.

There's an hour on the deep that ye know not of
When shakes the bold pirate with fear,
Tis the hour when the tempest is coming apace,
Or the storm to his mid career.
He would meet all the powers of the earth
With a stern and unyielding eye,
But he fears the tempest and storm,
The vengeance of God from on high.
And he sees in the dark and the wild array
Of the clouds that envelope the beams of day
The deeds of his life brought to view.

There's an hour when there's something like warship
Which seem in his bosom to dwell;
When he fears that grim death may be coming,
On ocean's dark bosomers sail,
He fears not to perish in battle array
Yet quails 'neath the eye of the storm—
Curses is the death that he fears, when the day
Rolls o'er him in night's sable form.
And his thoughts rush forth to that fearful hour,
When the Wisdom which giveth the storm-spirit power,
Shall call for his life's account.

A LAST WISH.

When breath and sense have left this clay,
In yon damp vault O' lay me not!
But kindly leave my bones away
To some lone, green, and sunny spot;
Where few shall be the feet that tread
With reckless haste about my grave;
And gently o'er my last still bed,
To whispering winds the grass shall wave.
The wild flowers too, I loved so well,
Shall blow and breathe their sweetness there,
And all around my grave shall tell,
"She felt that nature's face was fair."
And those that come because they loved
The moulder frame that lies below,
Shall find their anguish half removed,
While that sweet spot shall soothe their wo.
The notes of happy birds alone,
Shall there disturb the silent air;
And when the cheerful sun goes down,
His beams shall linger longest there.
And if,—when soft night breezes wake,
Roving among the sleeping flowers,
When dews their airy home forsake,
To rest till morn in earthly bowers,—
If then some dearest friend than all
Sneal to my grave to weep awhile,
And happier hours while recall,
And bid fond Memory beguile
And tediousness of clouded grief—
Faintly described—a fading ray—
My passing ghost shall breathe relief,
And whisper—"Linger! come away!"

ANECDOTES.

"Charlotte," said a gentleman to his daughter, you are too giddy, and I fear never give yourself time for reflection. "Pon honor, then, pa," replied the young lady, laughing. "You may make yourself perfectly easy on that account, for I generally spend half the day at the looking glass."

"Sammy," said a tender-hearted mother to her little son, "what on earth did you know that kitten in the well for?"
"O coz I was crazy."
"Come to your ma, you little cherub."
